The New-York Times.

VOL. XVIII.....NO. 5394. NEW-YORK WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1869.—TRIPLE SHEET. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

INDUSTRY AND CAPITAL.

Third Annual Report of Commissioner David A. Wells.

Comprehensive Survey of the Resources of the Country.

The Elements of National Wealth and Prosperity.

The Defects of the Present Tariff and Their Remedy.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SPECIAL COMMISSIONER OF THE REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., January, 1869.

SIR: I present in this my third annual report, which I have the honor herewith to present, to call, through you, the attention of Congress to the results of a special and extended investigation, instituted by me, not with a view not to establishing or confirming any previously entertained opinions, but rather of determining, through the evidence of positive data, what, if any, principles it may be in my power hereafter more advantageously to advocate, and most certain to establish the industrial and commercial prosperity of the whole country upon a permanent and substantial basis. As all reasoning in regard to the future must necessarily be predicated upon the experience of the past or present, it is obvious that the first step or starting point of this inquiry is involved in the determination of the question as to what is the present condition of the commerce and industry of the country.

The facts which constitute an answer to this question are to a considerable degree contradictory and perplexing. On the other hand there is much which indicates that the country is rapidly recovering from the effects of the war, and resuming that wonderful career of material development which especially characterized its history during the period embraced in the thirteen years from 1847 to 1860. On the other hand there is another class of facts which so unmistakably indicate the existence of agencies which tend to arrest or obstruct national development, and which foster speculation, idleness, extravagance of living, discourage with moderate and slow gains, but reward and the wages or earnings of labor [illegible]

[illegible] the evidence to support such further conclusions as may be deemed necessary. Although this evidence has been presented in great part already by the Commissioner in his two previous reports, yet a recapitulation of the leading elements of national wealth, on which rest the elements of national credit, can never be considered as untimely so long as a distrust of the resources of the nation is made any purpose fostered and encouraged—particularly by persons holding official or other public positions. This evidence may be grouped as follows:

WEALTH, TERRITORY.—From the 1st of July, 1865, to the 1st of December, 1868, about 1,000,000 natives of foreign countries have sought a permanent home in the United States. Investigations made some years ago, (since when the character of the immigration has greatly improved,) showed that these immigrants bring with them specie or its equivalent to the average amount of $50 per head; while their average value to the country in producers cannot be estimated at less than half the average value of an ordinary laborer in the South prior to the war, viz: $1,000 each. Immigration thus gives the territory of the United States, which is regarded as having added $60,000,000 directly, and $500,000,000 indirectly, to the wealth and resources of the country.

SECONDLY, A GENERAL INCREASE IN THE PRODUCTIVE EXPENDITURE IMPERCEPTIBLE.—The Commissioner is fully aware of the difficulties attendant upon the determination of estimates in this Department, prior, with the present irredeemable, fluctuating currency being wholly valueless as a measure; while a statement of quantities, to be strictly accurate, must be considered not only with reference to quality, but also to the normal increase in production, which under all circumstances accompanies an increase of population. Nevertheless, the wealth of the country in its capacity for annual production, and an analysis of this production in the aggregate, is at present the only available method of testing that wealth.

Speaking generally, however, in the first instance, the Commissioner asserts that all the available data tend to establish the following conclusions, viz.: That within the last five years more cotton spindles have been put in operation, more iron furnaces erected, more iron smelted, more bars rolled, more steel made, more coal and copper mined, more lumber sawed and hewn, more houses and shops constructed, more manufactories of different kinds started, and more petroleum collected, refined and exported, than during any equal period in the history of the country; and that this increase has been great both as regards quality and quantity, and greater than the legitimate increase to be expected from the normal increase of wealth and population. To support this general statement, the following specific evidence may be adduced:

1. Cotton Manufacture.—The number of cotton spindles in the United States, according to the census of 1860, was 5,235,797. From 1860 to 1864 there was little or no increase of cotton machinery, but possibly a diminution—many mills, under the great demand for army clothing, having been converted into establishments for the manufacture of woolens. The number of spindles, however, at present is shown by the recent returns of the American Cotton Manufacturers and Planters' Association to be about 7,000,000, a gain of 33.79 per cent. in from four to five years, and mainly since the termination of the war in 1865. As estimates based on less perfect data, given in the last annual report of the Commissioner, fixed the increase at only from 15 to 20 per cent.

2. Woolen Manufacture.—Imperfect statistics collected by the Northwestern Woolen Manufacturers' Association, show the increase in the woolen manufactories in seven States of the West, viz.: Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota, to have been, since 1860, as follows:

	No. of establishments.	Capital invested.	Sets of machines.
1860	259	$1,616,740	295
1868	597	5,482,000	604

3. Pig-Iron Production.—In the department of Iron Industry, the Commissioner would again call attention to the fact stated in his previous report, that the recent average annual increase in the production of pig iron is remarkably uniform and greatly in excess of the ratio of increase of population; the latter, at the present time, being assumed at about the ratio of increase from 1850 to 1860, viz., 3 per cent., while our annual increase in the production of pig iron during the last five years, and back to 1847, is as follows:

Annual product of pig iron.	Tons.	Annual increase.
1860	947,000
1864	1,135,497	20.22 per cent.
1865	1,152,000	1.46 per cent.
1867	1,445,271	5.50 per cent.
1868, (estimated)	1,550,000	7.16 per cent.
		9.06 per cent.

For the seven years from 1860 to 1867, the product of iron was 918,779 tons to 1867, the average annual increase has been 3.25 per cent.

This increase is in excess of the present average annual increase of the pig iron product of Great Britain, which since 1860 has been as follows:

	Tons.	Annual increase.
1860	3,827,000
1861	3,712,000
1862	3,943,000
1863	4,523,000
1864	4,768,000
1865	4,824,000
1866	4,523,000
1867	4,761,000

4. Production of Coal.—The production of coal in the United States, according to the census of 1860, was 13,333,000 tons, and adopting the above ratio of increase, the crop of 1868 acknowledged to be a full one, will be estimated at 1,100,000,000 bushels, and if sold at the assumed low average of 40 cents per bushel, would net over $400,000,000.

4. Statistics the agricultural product of the South, which have recently been collected by the association of cotton manufacturers, and published before referred to, show that the crop of 1868 was at least 2,500,000 bales, or about 60 per cent. of the average crop for the five years immediately preceding the war; while for the year 1859-60 the estimates are generally in favor of a crop of 4,500,000 bales. The results of the two crops much the intensity of the South will, however, be materially different, inasmuch as the crop year of 1859-60 the South did not raise food enough for its own subsistence, and a large part of the proceeds of the cotton of that year were used for the purchase of food, and also to repay advances for the previous purchase of stock and implements. This year, 1868-9, the South has raised its full quota of its necessities, and the proceeds of nearly the entire crop may be considered in the light of a surplus for future disposition.

The following are the estimated cotton crops of the South since the termination of the war: 1865-66, 2,154,476 bales; 1866-67, 1,930,000 bales; 1867-68, 2,498,098 bales; 1868-69, estimated, 2,500,000 bales.

The culture of rice at the South, which at the termination of the war was practically annihilated, is now [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] as in the former report, would have call attention to the progress which has been made during the last years in the reduction of the indebtedness of the several States, incurred in great part by reason of the war. Virginia, for example, the reduction of the debt of the State of New-Hampshire for the year 1868 was 8.9 per cent., for Vermont, 10.2 per cent., as against 7.7 per cent. in 1867; of Rhode Island, 12.7 per cent., of Connecticut, 9.4 per cent.; Kentucky, 21 per cent.; Ohio, 4.5 per cent.; Michigan, 4.4 per cent., and Indiana, 29 per cent. During the years 1867 and 1868 the State of Illinois reduced her debt 36.5 per cent., while New-York, which has comparatively the largest State indebtedness, reduced her debt during the past year to the extent of about 10 per cent., as compared with a reduction of 5.7 per cent. for the year 1867. West Virginia, Kentucky, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and California have as the present time practically no indebtedness. For further information respecting the present condition of State indebtedness, reference is made to the appendix of this report, marked G.

AGENCIES UNDERRATED IN NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

One subject in this place of our inquiry is well worthy of attention. It is this: To what agencies are our seemingly fabulous national developments to be attributed, and to what extent especially is it to be referred to positive legislation?

In answer to this it is to be said that all investigation clearly shows that these agencies have been mainly thirty, viz.: first, great natural resources in respect to abundant and fertile territory, great natural facilities for intercommunication, abundant and cheap raw material, and diversity of products and salubrity of climate; and secondly, a form and spirit of Government which heretofore has left man and capital, owns as are almost continental, free and unrestricted to carry out their own development. Since 1840, especially, other agencies have come in as powerful adjuncts, viz.: an immense influx of population and capital from the Old World; the unfettered invention and application of labor-saving machinery, and a most rapid extension of the railway system; which last, by giving a market to all the products of our national domain, has greatly stimulated the spirit of industry and enterprise. With these, also, should undoubtedly be included the purchase of California and the discovery of gold on the Pacific.

As a preparation for the relation of legislation by the National Government to the results under consideration, it we accept the adoption of a liberal policy in the disposition of the public lands, it is difficult, at least for the period which extends between 1840 and 1860, to affirm much that is positive, unless, in conformity with the maxim, that that Government is best which governs least, absence of legislation is to be regarded in the light of a positive good. If important results followed the acquisition of California, such results were owing to causes foreseen for antecedent; while as regards positive legislation, a review of all the facts cannot fail to suggest the doubt whether the evils which have resulted from instances of it have not far more than counterbalanced any advantages which may have proceeded from the experience of a fluctuating policy.

The Commissioner is well aware that this opinion will not be readily accepted by those who have been educated to believe that the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country was seriously affected by legislation which took place during the years elapsed from 1840 to 1846. But upon this point all investigation shows that the facts are entirely contrary to what may be regarded as the popular belief, which, indeed, in this particular, would have to be based on little else than mere assertions, which, remaining for a long time unquestioned, have at last acquired the force of accepted historical truth. Thus, for example, it has been constantly asserted, both in Congress and out of Congress, that the production of pig iron was remarkably stimulated under the tariff of 1842—rising from 220,000 tons in 1842 to 800,000 tons in 1846—and that under the tariff of 1846 the same industry was remarkably depressed. Now, these assertions may be correct, but the most reliable statistics which we have access, viz: those gathered by the American Iron Association, instruct us as follows:

Production of pig iron in 1836, 165,000 tons; in 1846, 847,000 tons. Increase in 10 years, 110 per cent. or 11 per cent. per annum.

Production in 1846, 486,000 tons; increase in 8 years, 40 per cent. or 5 per cent. per annum.

Production in 1856, 564,000 tons; increase in 10 years, 63 per cent.

Production in 1858, 754,000 tons; increase in 8 years, 30 per cent.

Production in 1860, 919,000 tons; increase in 10 years, 63 per cent.

It thus appears that the great annual increase in the production of pig iron took place prior to the year 1840, and that for 10 years was remarkably uniform at the rate of 10 to 11 per cent. per annum, and that, since then, no matter what has been the character of legislation, whether the tariff was low or high, whether the condition of the country was one of war or peace, the increase of the production has been at the average of from 5 to 6 per cent. per annum, or more than double the ratio of the increase of population.

Again, as another curious illustration of an apparent misconception of the effects of past legislation upon the development of the country, take the following paragraph from the recent report of a Congressional committee:

"No business man of mature age need be reminded of the revulsion which followed in some degree the adoption of that—the decline of production, of immigration, of wages, of public or private revenue, and the culmination of the panic in the year 1857, with the memorable crash of that period; the sweeping away of the capital of the country, the suspension of the banks, and, as a consequence, the suspension to the verge of bankruptcy, and the unparalleled distress among the unemployed poor."

Now, with all due deference to the Committee, the Commissioner would ask attention to the following statistics bearing on the question under consideration:

Increase in the production of pig iron: In 1840, 347,000 tons; in 1845, 486,000; in 1850, 564,758; in 1855, 764,178; 1860, 919,770.

Increase in the production of Pennsylvania anthracite coal: In 1840, 1,165,418 tons; 1846, 2,344,008; 1847, 2,683,300; 1848, 2,917,641; 1855, 4,424,097; 1860, 6,142,906.

Increase in ship-building: 1843, 129,084 tons; 1845, 146,018; 1850, 279,319; 1855, 583,450.

Annual increase of railroad construction: 1843, 491 miles; 1844, 296; 1847, 609; 1849, 1,969; 1850, 2,452; 1852, 3,360; 1853, 3,615; 1854, 2,937; 1863, 1,730; 1865 (estimated), 2,500; 1866, 4,000.

It will thus be seen that since and including the year 1840, the year of the termination of the war, nearly 3,000 miles of railroad have been constructed in the United States, and that the present ratio of increase is more than double the average of railroad history prior to 1840, viz.: 1,156 miles.)

On the other hand, the average annual increase of railroads in Great Britain from 1830 to 1860 was only 571 miles, and in France during the same period 600 miles.

An analysis of the railway system of the United States, which has been made for the first time during the past year, reveals a result, however, with results which, were they not founded on incontrovertible data, would seem fabulous. Thus, the gross earnings to cost of the railroads of the whole country for the year 1867 was equal to about 21 per cent.; that of the Eastern States, about 28, per cent. The railroads of the country, therefore, now receive their cost in a little more than four years, and this ratio of gross earnings to cost is steadily increasing with the increase of the railway system and trade of the country.

In 1867, the average number of tons of freight carried upon the railroads of the country is estimated at 2,000 tons per mile of road. The tonnage of the railroads of Massachusetts in 1867, equaled 3,612,[illegible] per mile; that of the railroads of New-York 3,100,000, and that of Pennsylvania 6,000,000. The gross tonnage of the 39,084 miles of railroad in existence at the close of 1867, at the above estimate, was equivalent to 78,168,000, and if we deduct from this amount 15,000,000 tons for local traffic, cheap material, and an equal amount for duplications of the same tonnage on different roads, there will be left 48,168,000 tons of merchandise moved annually upon all the railways of the United States. At an estimated value of $150 per ton for this tonnage, the total annual value of the merchandise transported on the roads at present equals $7,275,200,000.

The total amount of tonnage transported on all the lines of the country for the year 1867, is estimated by good authorities at not exceeding 120,000,000 tons. If from this we deduct 3,000,000 tons for coal and other cheap materials, and 1,000,000 tons for duplications, there will be left a merchandise tonnage of 116,000,000 tons in 1867, against 49,420,000 tons in 1857. The rate of increase in this period, therefore, has been equal to 200 per cent., and the actual increase 43,420,000 tons. At the estimated value of $150 per ton, the increase in the value of the railway traffic, in sixteen years has been $6,513,000,000, or in the rate of nearly $400,000,000 per annum, a sum which also he hoped this will hold of this total increase in the latter period in the seven years that have elapsed since 1860.

The increased movement on the railways of the United States, which is the main exponent in [illegible] of the development of the country, is [illegible] the earnings of the last period of railway index of the West exhibit for the first ten months of 1868, [illegible] increase rather than a decrease of traffic between [illegible] and eight per cent. as compared with the earnings of the corresponding months for the year 1867. [illegible] the same statement, or the railways, and [illegible] of New-York, which are known to be [illegible] the same state of prosperity, as is [illegible] the whole country, we [illegible] the annual coastwise tonnage increased from 1,200,000 tons, in 1860, to 2,000,000 tons in 1866, an increase of 124 per cent.; while the annual value of the tonnage increased from $[illegible] in 1860, to $1,175,000,000 in 1867, a gain of 252 per cent. in value.

An examination of the railroad statistics of the whole country for the above period further indicates that during the ten years above referred to, or since the close of the period of tonnage [illegible] the railways of the United States have grown at a rate [illegible] greater than the path of the increase of population, [illegible]

[illegible] graphic system of the United States is reported [illegible] approximately as follows:

	Miles.
1860	2,000
1864	2,500
1867	3,000
1868	3,500
1869	4,000

[illegible]

[illegible] PRODUCTION OF STATE DEBTS.

[illegible] some further indication of the material [illegible] of the country, the Commissioner [illegible]

[illegible] as to the former report, would have call attention to the progress which has been made during the last years in the reduction of the indebtedness of the several States, incurred in great part by reason of the war. Virginia, for example, the reduction of the debt of the State of New-Hampshire for the year 1868 was 8.9 per cent., for Vermont, 10.2 per cent., as against 7.7 per cent. in 1867; of Rhode Island, 12.7 per cent., of Connecticut, 9.4 per cent.; Kentucky, 21 per cent.; Ohio, 4.5 per cent.; Michigan, 4.4 per cent., and Indiana, 29 per cent. During the years 1867 and 1868 the State of Illinois reduced her debt 36.5 per cent., while New-York, which has comparatively the largest State indebtedness, reduced her debt during the past year to the extent of about 10 per cent., as compared with a reduction of 5.7 per cent. for the year 1867. West Virginia, Kentucky, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and California have as the present time practically no indebtedness. For further information respecting the present condition of State indebtedness, reference is made to the appendix of this report, marked G.

AGENCIES UNDERRATED IN NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

One subject in this place of our inquiry is well worthy of attention. It is this: To what agencies are our seemingly fabulous national developments to be attributed, and to what extent especially is it to be referred to positive legislation?

In answer to this it is to be said that all investigation clearly shows that these agencies have been mainly thirty, viz.: first, great natural resources in respect to abundant and fertile territory, great natural facilities for intercommunication, abundant and cheap raw material, and diversity of products and salubrity of climate; and secondly, a form and spirit of Government which heretofore has left man and capital, owns as are almost continental, free and unrestricted to carry out their own development. Since 1840, especially, other agencies have come in as powerful adjuncts, viz.: an immense influx of population and capital from the Old World; the unfettered invention and application of labor-saving machinery, and a most rapid extension of the railway system; which last, by giving a market to all the products of our national domain, has greatly stimulated the spirit of industry and enterprise. With these, also, should undoubtedly be included the purchase of California and the discovery of gold on the Pacific.

As a preparation for the relation of legislation by the National Government to the results under consideration, it we accept the adoption of a liberal policy in the disposition of the public lands, it is difficult, at least for the period which extends between 1840 and 1860, to affirm much that is positive, unless, in conformity with the maxim, that that Government is best which governs least, absence of legislation is to be regarded in the light of a positive good. If important results followed the acquisition of California, such results were owing to causes foreseen for antecedent; while as regards positive legislation, a review of all the facts cannot fail to suggest the doubt whether the evils which have resulted from instances of it have not far more than counterbalanced any advantages which may have proceeded from the experience of a fluctuating policy.

The Commissioner is well aware that this opinion will not be readily accepted by those who have been educated to believe that the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country was seriously affected by legislation which took place during the years elapsed from 1840 to 1846. But upon this point all investigation shows that the facts are entirely contrary to what may be regarded as the popular belief, which, indeed, in this particular, would have to be based on little else than mere assertions, which, remaining for a long time unquestioned, have at last acquired the force of accepted historical truth. Thus, for example, it has been constantly asserted, both in Congress and out of Congress, that the production of pig iron was remarkably stimulated under the tariff of 1842—rising from 220,000 tons in 1842 to 800,000 tons in 1846—and that under the tariff of 1846 the same industry was remarkably depressed. Now, these assertions may be correct, but the most reliable statistics which we have access, viz: those gathered by the American Iron Association, instruct us as follows:

Production of pig iron in 1836, 165,000 tons; in 1846, 847,000 tons. Increase in 10 years, 110 per cent. or 11 per cent. per annum.

Production in 1846, 486,000 tons; increase in 8 years, 40 per cent. or 5 per cent. per annum.

Production in 1856, 564,000 tons; increase in 10 years, 63 per cent.

Production in 1858, 754,000 tons; increase in 8 years, 30 per cent.

Production in 1860, 919,000 tons; increase in 10 years, 63 per cent.

It thus appears that the great annual increase in the production of pig iron took place prior to the year 1840, and for 10 years was remarkably uniform at the rate of 10 to 11 per cent. per annum, and that, since then, no matter what has been the character of legislation, whether the tariff was low or high, whether the condition of the country was one of war or peace, the increase of the production has been at the average of from 5 to 6 per cent. per annum, or more than double the ratio of the increase of population.

Again, as another curious illustration of an apparent misconception of the effects of past legislation upon the development of the country, take the following paragraph from the recent report of a Congressional committee:

"No business man of mature age need be reminded of the revulsion which followed in some degree the adoption of that—the decline of production, of immigration, of wages, of public or private revenue, and the culmination of the panic in the year 1857, with the memorable crash of that period; the sweeping away of the capital of the country, the suspension of the banks, and, as a consequence, the suspension to the verge of bankruptcy, and the unparalleled distress among the unemployed poor."

Now, with all due deference to the Committee, the Commissioner would ask attention to the following statistics bearing on the question under consideration:

Increase in the production of pig iron: In 1840, 347,000 tons; in 1845, 486,000; in 1850, 564,758; in 1855, 764,178; 1860, 919,770.

Increase in the production of Pennsylvania anthracite coal: In 1840, 1,165,418 tons; 1846, 2,344,008; 1847, 2,683,300; 1848, 2,917,641; 1855, 4,424,097; 1860, 6,142,906.

Increase in ship-building: 1843, 129,084 tons; 1845, 146,018; 1850, 279,319; 1855, 583,450.

Annual increase of railroad construction: 1843, 491 miles; 1844, 296; 1847, 609; 1849, 1,969; 1850, 2,452; 1852, 3,360; 1853, 3,615; 1854, 2,937; 1863, 1,730; 1865 (estimated), 2,500; 1866, 4,000.

It will thus be seen that since and including the year 1840, the year of the termination of the war, nearly 3,000 miles of railroad have been constructed in the United States, and that the present ratio of increase is more than double the average of railroad history prior to 1840, viz.: 1,156 miles.)

On the other hand, the average annual increase of railroads in Great Britain from 1830 to 1860 was only 571 miles, and in France during the same period 600 miles.

An analysis of the railway system of the United States, which has been made for the first time during the past year, reveals a result, however, with results which, were they not founded on incontrovertible data, would seem fabulous. Thus, the gross earnings to cost of the railroads of the whole country for the year 1867 was equal to about 21 per cent.; that of the Eastern States, about 28, per cent. The railroads of the country, therefore, now receive their cost in a little more than four years, and this ratio of gross earnings to cost is steadily increasing with the increase of the railway system and trade of the country.

In 1867, the average number of tons of freight carried upon the railroads of the country is estimated at 2,000 tons per mile of road. The tonnage of the railroads of Massachusetts in 1867, equaled 3,612,[illegible] per mile; that of the railroads of New-York 3,100,000, and that of Pennsylvania 6,000,000. The gross tonnage of the 39,084 miles of railroad in existence at the close of 1867, at the above estimate, was equivalent to 78,168,000, and if we deduct from this amount 15,000,000 tons for local traffic, cheap material, and an equal amount for duplications of the same tonnage on different roads, there will be left 48,168,000 tons of merchandise moved annually upon all the railways of the United States. At an estimated value of $150 per ton for this tonnage, the total annual value of the merchandise transported on the roads at present equals $7,275,200,000.

The total amount of tonnage transported on all the lines of the country for the year 1867, is estimated by good authorities at not exceeding 120,000,000 tons. If from this we deduct 3,000,000 tons for coal and other cheap materials, and 1,000,000 tons for duplications, there will be left a merchandise tonnage of 116,000,000 tons in 1867, against 49,420,000 tons in 1857. The rate of increase in this period, therefore, has been equal to 200 per cent., and the actual increase 43,420,000 tons. At the estimated value of $150 per ton, the increase in the value of the railway traffic, in sixteen years has been $6,513,000,000, or in the rate of nearly $400,000,000 per annum, a sum which also he hoped this will hold of this total increase in the latter period in the seven years that have elapsed since 1860.

The increased movement on the railways of the United States, which is the main exponent in [illegible] of the development of the country, is [illegible] the earnings of the last period of railway index of the West exhibit for the first ten months of 1868, [illegible] increase rather than a decrease of traffic between [illegible] and eight per cent. as compared with the earnings of the corresponding months for the year 1867. [illegible] the same statement, or the railways, and [illegible] of New-York, which are known to be [illegible] the same state of prosperity, as is [illegible] the whole country, we [illegible] the annual coastwise tonnage increased from 1,200,000 tons, in 1860, to 2,000,000 tons in 1866, an increase of 124 per cent.; while the annual value of the tonnage increased from [illegible] in 1860, to $1,175,000,000 in 1867, a gain of 252 per cent. in value.

An examination of the railroad statistics of the whole country for the above period further indicates that during the ten years above referred to, or since the close of the period of tonnage [illegible] the railways of the United States have grown at a rate [illegible] greater than the path of the increase of population, [illegible]

[illegible] graphic system of the United States is reported [illegible] approximately as follows:

	Miles.
1860	2,000
1864	2,500
1867	3,000
1868	3,500
1869	4,000

[illegible]

[illegible] PRODUCTION OF STATE DEBTS.

[illegible] some further indication of the material [illegible] of the country, the Commissioner [illegible]

[illegible] thatified for oil-paintings, rough building stone, Indian corn, Brewood, Bibles and tar—the last to the extent of 1½ per cent., gold; and this claim the Commissioner is obliged to admit is, so far as very great extent, in exact accordance with the truth.

The United States finds itself, therefore, in the anomalous position of a great nation, favored in many respects as no other nation upon which the sun shines, unable to exchange its products on terms of equality with the products of any other country; the market occupied by which always the product of supplies of the precious metals. Inquiry is now to be made into the causes to which these results must be attributed, and as to the measures which seem likely to prove remedial, avoiding, in so doing, to the greatest extent possible, any repetition of the facts and arguments which have been presented by the Commissioner in his former reports, or by others who have discussed the subject, and aiming at present rather the results of a continued investigation and of an enlarged experience.

AGENCIES ADVERSE TO NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

The immediate cause of the anomalous condition of affairs in question must unquestionably be referred to the greatly increased cost of nearly all forms of labor and commodities as compared with the price for the same that prevailed in the decade immediately preceding the war; while these, in turn, must be referred to the combined influence of three agencies growing out of the war, viz.: inconvertible paper currency, unequal and heavy taxation, and a limited supply of skilled labor, the last manifesting itself at the present time in specialties rather than in general.

DEPRECIATION OF IRREDEEMABLE PAPER CURRENCY.

As the specific influence of the first agency has been so often and so thoroughly discussed, the Commissioner will only ask attention, under this head, to a few points of premeditated novelty or interest, and first, to a specific statement of actual experience, illustrative of the manner in which an irredeemable paper currency, or what is the same thing, a national abnegation of specie payments, unavoidably tends to destroy all profitable commercial relations with foreign countries in which trade and industry is conducted on a specie basis. The statement is furnished to the Commissioner by a manufacturer of furniture in one of the Middle States, who, previous to the war had built up an extensive export business to the West Indies, Central and South America, of a variety of "cane-seated" and "cane-backed" furniture suited to warm latitudes.

Thus on the 1st of March, 1863, gold and currency being at par, $1,000 in gold possessed a purchasing power sufficient to obtain for the South American importer 111 1-9 dozen of what are termed in the trade "ordinary square-post cane-seat chairs." About the 1st of January, 1862, gold began to command a premium, and advanced during the next three years with great rapidity. This movement was not, however, participated in at first to any considerable extent, by either labor or commodities, and in consequence the purchasing power of gold rapidly increased; so much so that on the 1st of July, 1864, the $1,000 gold which in 1861 bought 111 1-9 dozen chairs, then brought 148 dozen. Under these circumstances, it was to be expected, trade increased, as the foreign purchaser found the American market by far the best for his interest; but much later, 1864, a movement commenced in an exactly opposite direction, gold receding and labor and commodities advancing in very unequal ratios. Thus in January, 1865, the $1,000 gold, which four years previous had a purchasing power of 111 1-9 dozen chairs, and on the 1st of July, 1864, of 148 dozen, then commanded but 136⅔ dozen; in February, 1866, a still smaller number, viz., 91⅓ dozen, and ultimately attained its minimum in January, 1867, when the purchasing power of the sum named was only 68⅓ dozen. From this point the purchasing power has gradually increased, so that for the past year, 1868, has remained at the rate of about 100 per cent. or at one dozen less than could be bought with the same money in 1861.

The result has been that the foreign purchaser now goes to France or Germany; while the products of American industry, in the form of furniture, before so large a market available to exchange for sugars, [illegible] or species, have, in the main, necessarily been substituted; and, to use the words of the manufacturer describing his condition, "unless there is a speedy return to specie payments, custom will soon so fix the channels and currents of trade that any attempt at my part to divert them will be attended with great difficulty;" and what has thus been shown to be the case in regard to the export trade of the United States in furniture, may be asserted in a more or less of almost every other manufactured product, which, as a rule, we were accustomed, before the war, to exchange for foreign commodities.

COMPARISON OF PRICES OF LABOR AND COMMODITIES IN 1867, 1860-61, AND 1867-68.

The present abnormal condition and the recent instructions in the prices of labor and commodities also properly come up for consideration in connection with the subject of an irredeemable paper currency—the chief agency to which the disturbances in question must be referred.

The investigations previously instituted by the Commissioner have established the fact, that up to the commencement of the year 1867, the general effect of the agencies growing out of the war had been to cause an average advance in the price of commodities to the extent of about 60 per cent., while the corresponding average advance in wages was not in excess of 30 per cent.

He has now to ask attention to the conclusions which another year's experience and investigation have brought to us in relation to this subject. The results of long and careful investigations in respect to the retail prices of the principal articles of domestic consumption by operatives in the manufacturing towns of New-England, the Middle and some of the Western States, have afforded data for accurately estimating the increase in the prices of such articles in 1867 as compared with 1860-61. They establish the following conclusions:

That the average increase in the price of groceries and provisions in 1867, as compared with 1860-61, was 68 per cent.; the calculation on the basis of the quantities consumed on an average by a family of five workmen, a little in excess of 66 per cent. of domestic dry goods, including clothing, 50½ per cent., of fuel, 57 per cent.; of house-rent, 56 per cent. The latter average is, however, largely affected by the circumstance that in New-England, where manufacturing companies or corporations very generally own the tenements occupied by their operatives, rents have not been advanced to any considerable extent. Excluding New-England from the calculation, the average advance in rents for 1867, as compared with 1860-61, must be estimated at a much higher figure. This in the smaller manufacturing towns of Pennsylvania the average increase in the rents of houses occupied by operatives is believed to have been about 81 per cent., and in New-Jersey 111 per cent. In the cities of New-York, Philadelphia, Newark and Pittsburg, the increase has been from 90 to 100 per cent.

The average of these results, proportioned to the assumed varying ratio of expenditure under the several heads, shows for the year 1867, and for the first half of the year 1868, that the increase in the price of all the elements which constitute the food, clothing and shelter of a family has been about 59 per cent., as compared with the standard prices of 1860-61.

The result, in general, of this large increase in the prices of commodities of domestic consumption to the laboring man becomes evident, by comparing such increase with the increase in the rates of wages during the period under comparison—which were, for the year 1867 as compared with 1860-61, as follows: For skilled mechanical labor, 30 per cent.; for unskilled mechanical labor, 40 per cent.

In the case of unmarried men, the comparison is more favorable than as respects men with families, the average increase in the prices of the articles constituting the living board in manufacturing towns, 72 per cent.; in respective of domestic dry goods, 50 per cent.; ordinary boots and shoes, 50 per cent. Skilled workmen, who are at the same time unmarried, and who are in the receipt of wages from 45 to 50 per cent. in advance of the rates paid in 1860, and their condition, as regards net income, approximately the same as before the war.

The returns to numerous and careful inquiries, instituted at the request of the Commissioner, by proprietors or superintendents of manufacturing establishments in the New-England, Middle, and some of the Western States, also afford much interesting information relative to the average weekly earnings and expenditures of American operatives, grouped as families, in the years 1860 and 1867; and also in respect to the comparative opportunities enjoyed by such families at the two periods referred to, for the realization of a surplus over and above the expenditures absolutely necessary for shelter and subsistence.

The following tables, based on indisputable and authentic sources, show the average weekly earnings of workmen, a little in excess of 66 per cent. of the domestic dry goods, including clothing, 50½ per cent., of fuel, 57 per cent.; of house-rent, 56 per cent. This latter average is, however, largely affected by the circumstance that in New-England, where manufacturing companies or corporations very generally own the tenements occupied by their operatives, rents have not been advanced to any considerable extent. Excluding New-England from the calculation, the average advance in rents for 1867, as compared with 1860-61, must be estimated at a much higher figure. This in the smaller manufacturing towns of Pennsylvania the average increase in the rents of houses occupied by operatives is believed to have been about 81 per cent., and in New-Jersey 111 per cent. In the cities of New-York, Philadelphia, Newark and Pittsburg, the increase has been from 90 to 100 per cent.

The average of these results, proportioned to the assumed varying ratio of expenditure under the several heads, shows for the year 1867, and for the first half of the year 1868, that the increase in the price of all the elements which constitute the food, clothing and shelter of a family has been about 59 per cent., as compared with the standard prices of 1860-61.

The result, in general, of this large increase in the prices of commodities of domestic consumption to the laboring man becomes evident, by comparing such increase with the increase in the rates of wages during the period under comparison—which were, for the year 1867 as compared with 1860-61, were as follows: For skilled mechanical labor, 30 per cent.; for skilled mechanical labor, 40 per cent.

In the case of unmarried men, the comparison is more favorable than as respects men with families, the average increase in the prices of the articles constituting the living board in manufacturing towns, 72 per cent.; in respective of domestic dry goods, 50 per cent.; ordinary boots and shoes, 50 per cent. Skilled workmen, who are at the same time unmarried, and who are in the receipt of wages from 45 to 50 per cent. in advance of the rates paid in 1860, and their condition, as regards net income, approximately the same as before the war.

The returns to numerous and careful inquiries, instituted at the request of the Commissioner, by proprietors or superintendents of manufacturing establishments in the New-England, Middle, and some of the Western States, also afford much interesting information relative to the average weekly earnings and expenditures of American operatives, grouped as families, in the years 1860 and 1867; and also in respect to the comparative opportunities enjoyed by such families at the two periods referred to, for the realization of a surplus over and above the expenditures absolutely necessary for shelter and subsistence.

The following tables, based on indisputable and authentic sources, show the average weekly earnings of workmen, a little in excess of 66 per cent. of the domestic dry goods, including clothing, 50½ per cent., of fuel, 57 per cent.; of house-rent, 56 per cent. This latter average is, however, largely affected by the circumstance that in New-England, where manufacturing companies or corporations very generally own the tenements occupied by their operatives, rents have not been advanced to any considerable extent. Excluding New-England from the calculation, the average advance in rents for 1867, as compared with 1860-61, must be estimated at a much higher figure. This in the smaller manufacturing towns of Pennsylvania the average increase in the rents of houses occupied by operatives is believed to have been about 81 per cent., and in New-Jersey 111 per cent. In the cities of New-York, Philadelphia, Newark and Pittsburg, the increase has been from 90 to 100 per cent.

The average of these results, proportioned to the assumed varying ratio of expenditure under the several heads, shows for the year 1867, and for the first half of the year 1868, that the increase in the price of all the elements which constitute the food, clothing and shelter of a family has been about 59 per cent., as compared with the standard prices of 1860-61.

The result, in general, of this large increase in the prices of commodities of domestic consumption to the laboring man becomes evident, by comparing such increase with the increase in the rates of wages during the period under comparison—which were, for the year 1867 as compared with 1860-61, were as follows: For skilled mechanical labor, 30 per cent.; for skilled mechanical labor, 40 per cent.

In the case of unmarried men, the comparison is more favorable than as respects men with families, the average increase in the prices of the articles constituting the living board in manufacturing towns, 72 per cent.; in respective of domestic dry goods, 50 per cent.; ordinary boots and shoes, 50 per cent. Skilled workmen, who are at the same time unmarried, and who are in the receipt of wages from 45 to 50 per cent. in advance of the rates paid in 1860, and their condition, as regards net income, approximately the same as before the war.

The returns to numerous and careful inquiries, instituted at the request of the Commissioner, by proprietors or superintendents of manufacturing establishments in the New-England, Middle, and some of the Western States, also afford much interesting information relative to the average weekly earnings and expenditures of American operatives, grouped as families, in the years 1860 and 1867; and also in respect to the comparative opportunities enjoyed by such families at the two periods referred to, for the realization of a surplus over and above the expenditures absolutely necessary for shelter and subsistence.

The following tables, based on indisputable and authentic sources, show the average weekly earnings of workmen, a little in excess of 66 per cent. of the domestic dry goods, including clothing, 50½ per cent., of fuel, 57 per cent.; of house-rent, 56 per cent. This latter average is, however, largely affected by the circumstance that in New-England, where manufacturing companies or corporations very generally own the tenements occupied by their operatives, rents have not been advanced to any considerable extent. Excluding New-England from the calculation, the average advance in rents for 1867, as compared with 1860-61, must be estimated at a much higher figure. This in the smaller manufacturing towns of Pennsylvania the average increase in the rents of houses occupied by operatives is believed to have been about 81 per cent., and in New-Jersey 111 per cent. In the cities of New-York, Philadelphia, Newark and Pittsburg, the increase has been from 90 to 100 per cent.

The average of these results, proportioned to the assumed varying ratio of expenditure under the several heads, shows for the year 1867, and for the first half of the year 1868, that the increase in the price of all the elements which constitute the food, clothing and shelter of a family has been about 59 per cent., as compared with the standard prices of 1860-61.

The result, in general, of this large increase in the prices of commodities of domestic consumption to the laboring man becomes evident, by comparing such increase with the increase in the rates of wages during the period under comparison—which were, for the year 1867 as compared with 1860-61, were as follows: For skilled mech the taxes assessed under the internal revenue, and in the great inequality which is known to exist in the distribution of the income tax; the amount which passed to the credit of this latter tax in a single district of the State of New-York for the fiscal year 1867, having been more than double the collections under the same head in the same year from ten entire States of the Union.

Following what appears to be a logical order, the Commissioner would next ask attention to two other points which have been made the subject of investigation, namely, the direct effect of the tariff on the price of imports; and the effect of the increase of tariff in checking importations.

INFLUENCE OF THE TARIFF IN CHECKING IMPORTATIONS.

We come next to the consideration of the influence of the tariff in checking importations; the practical interest in which question, at the present time, centers almost entirely in the fact that an increase of the existing tariff has of late been persistently urged as a certain remedy for a present annual import, whose aggregate is regarded as excessive. That the imposition or increase of a tariff does contribute specifically to diminish or prohibit importations cannot be doubted; as, to use but a single illustration, the experience under the increased tariff on wool, passed March, 1867, sufficiently demonstrates. Thus, the net import of foreign wool, which amounted to 36,969,267 pounds in 1864, and 67,065,386 in 1866, declined to 29,475,698 in 1867, and to 21,822,156 in 1868.

But whatever may be the force of specific examples, it is equally certain that a consideration of the whole subject will show that no material reduction of importations—certainly none proportionate to the means employed—can be effected through any practicable increase of the existing tariff. This will appear evident when we reflect that the articles which constitute a very considerable part of the value of importations are not articles of luxury, which can be dispensed with at will, but articles whose consumption the people will not relinquish except upon the pressure of extreme poverty or necessity; or others which are absolutely essential to the continuance of great branches of domestic industry. Thus, for example, the four articles of tea, coffee, sugar and molasses, constituted nearly one-third of the total value of the imports for the fiscal year 1867-68, exclusive of bullion and specie. Their consumption, moreover, is not only constantly and rapidly increasing with every increase of wealth and population, but the whole drift of popular sentiment is unmistakably inclined to invest a much larger importation through a reduction of the existing tariff. Another large class of articles, as the dye-woods and dye materials, crude India rubber, soda ash, bleaching powders, guano, lumber, sulphur, hides and horns, hatters' furs, ivory, raw silk, gums, rags, jute, saltpetre, tin, &c., are so essentially the raw materials of great branches of domestic industry, that any enforced suspension of their importation could only be attained at the expense of national decadence, an increased importation would infallibly indicate an increase of national prosperity. On these two classes of articles alone the increase in the value of imports growing out of perfectly legitimate and natural causes, will probably be sufficient during the next three years to fully counterbalance any reduction in the value of imports which might be effected through any changes which it would be possible to make in the tariff in respect to all other articles of foreign growth and importation. Thus, for example, the increase in the consumption of imported sugars for the year 1865 is reported as full sixteen per cent; show the consumption of the preceding year, the average for the year 1869 an increase of at least ten per cent, is anticipated. Again, all experience, and especially the experience of the United States within the last three years, shows that there is a point beyond which duties imposed on importations cannot be carried without rendering them practically inoperative. Thus, after the tariff on wines, liquors, silks and silks have been carried to such a degree that only so much of these articles are now imported as are necessary to meet a popular requirement that no law can prevent from being satisfied. If carried beyond this point, the requirement or necessity will still exist, but the tariff will fail of its end, and, rather than the regular importer, will become the agent of supply; for in no country can evasion of the excise or customs be carried out more successfully than in a republic where popular opinion is both the law-maker and the law-sustainer. If proofs in support of this position are demanded, they are most abundant.

We select first the article of champagne, the importation of which, in accordance with popular demand, is less subject to fluctuation than almost any other article of foreign growth or production. In 1864, with gold at from 200 to 260, as the currency, the importation was 103,186 dozen; while in 1866, with gold at 132, the importation was 102,341 down. In view of this uniformity, it is reasonable to suppose that in this, the last half of the nineteenth century, any enactment of law is likely to prevent the people of the United States from obtaining at reasonable prices so much of this article as they may be willing and able to pay for. We find in 1862, with gold at 112, the importation was 142,000. In respect to cigars, on which a rate of duty most excessive and extravagant, and twice as great as that imposed on champagne, has been adopted. Thus, in 1860, with a moderate duty, the importation of cigars was returned at about 300,000,000 per annum; in 1867, with a duty of about 150 per cent, in gold, it was returned as the import, at 427,000,000; in 1868, 90,000,000; and yet cigars of foreign production continue to be used in such quantities as to make it clearly evident that the supply is much greater than the returns of the legitimate importation would indicate. Again, opium, with a duty of nearly 100 per cent, or values, was sold freely in the New York market during the year past at lower prices in currency than the equivalent of the market value through legitimate sources in gold.

In 1849, the average tariff being 23.1 per cent., the total importations were of one value of $100,162,087. Three years later, or in 1852, the tariff having been advanced to an average of 29.6, the total value of the importations was $117,254,564, or an increase of the average duty of one-third, having increased the imports one-sixth.

The following table shows the varying values of imports for a number of years, under comparatively the same average rate of duty:

Years.	Rate of duty.	Value of imports.
1849	23.1	$100,162,087
1852	29	117,254,564
1856	29	147,857,420
1864	29.5	204,592,331
1865	29	261,468,520

In 1860, the average rate of duties being 19 per cent., the returned value of the imports was $362,163,941. In 1866, the average rate of duties on total importations being 45.19 per cent., the returned value of imports was $437,640,254.

In short, it is other and far different agencies than the rates of duty which may be imposed under a tariff that determine to a great extent the value of importations.

It is evident, therefore, that however desirable it may be, under the present financial condition of the country, to diminish the drain of the precious metals, or to avoid foreign indebtedness on account of foreign importations, by way of the successful and practical accomplishment of the object, there lies in the direction of an increase of the existing tariff.

RELATIONS OF A TARIFF FOR REVENUE AND A TARIFF FOR PROTECTION.

But whatever of interest may attach to the discussion of a tariff, framed solely with a view to revenue, such discussion, except it refers to mere matters of adjustment, lies at present but little practical importance, inasmuch as the Commissioner is retaining in our fiscal legislation in respect to which there is greater unanimity of public sentiment, that that which recognizes the advantage and necessity of making the tariff available to the greatest extent possible as a source of revenue. In this there is no essential difference in the view of any party, if there is any one who can so far divest themselves of the conditions and necessities of the hour as to advocate a removal of all imports and an abolition of all Custom-houses, their expression certainly does not extend to the immediate future. It is only when we pass to the consideration of a tariff imposed for purposes other than revenue, that such a wide difference of opinion manifest themselves and the embarrassments of the question are constituted.

In the consideration of a tariff for revenue, the question at issue would, as already stated, appear to be one mainly of comparison, viz.: as regards the relative superiority of this or some other system, for the collection of a given and necessary amount of revenue.

In the consideration of a tariff imposed for purposes other than for revenue, the question at issue on the other hand would appear to be one of profit and loss, or rather of burden and advantage,—the burden being the tax and enhanced prices which the community consents to impose upon itself, and the advantage, the profit which is held to accrue from the resulting stimulus and development of domestic industry.

If these premises be correct, the essential point of interest in all this inquiry then, is simply to ascertain on which side of the account stands the balance, and the knowledge in turn is to be obtained from the experience of production and consumption.

ESSENTIAL FEATURES OF THE EXISTING TARIFF.

The basis of the existing tariff is to be found in the act of March 2, 1861, which virtually repealed all former duties, by providing that upon all raw or unmanufactured articles and upon all articles manufactured in whole or part, not enumerated in said act, the rates of duty should be respectively 10 and 20 per cent, of ad valorem duties. Since that date there have been eleven amendments essentially affecting rates of duty, some of which, like the acts of July 14, 1862, and June 30, 1867, were equivalent to almost complete revisions.

The rate of duty imposed by the existing tariff on the invoice value in gold of the dutiable goods imported into the United States has averaged for the last three fiscal years about 47 per cent.

If to these rates, freight, insurance and commissions, which in themselves constitute a natural and unavoidable tariff, be added, the average of duties will be still further increased to the extent of from 15 to 18 per cent.

Again, the requirements for revenue growing out of the war having necessitated the creation of an all-pervading system of internal taxation subsequent to the imposition of the tariff in 1861, it became necessarily necessary, in order to prevent such increase from being neutralized by the taxes levied on the products of domestic industry, to increase at least correspondingly the rates of duty levied on the importation of corresponding commodities, which end was clearly in view, and in a great measure attained in the respective acts of June 30, 1864, and March 3, 1865. This statement is illustrated by the following table, which shows in respect to certain staple articles, the internal tax imposed by the act of June 30, 1864, and subsequent acts, and the increase of tariff allowed on the corresponding commodities under the act of March 3, 1865.

Since the date of July, 1866, the internal taxes on the above and all other domestic products, with few exceptions, have been substantially removed, and without any corresponding alterations in the tariff. The practical effect of this action, therefore, has been to increase gradually, and as it were insensibly, the percentage of the tariff, which increased for the majority of domestic products will average five per cent. as a minimum. On some articles, however, the cumulative increase has been much greater, as, for example, upon imported liquors, the actual tariff upon which, by the reduction of the internal taxes, must be regarded as equivalent to at least forty per cent.

Notwithstanding these extreme rates, higher than have ever before been levied by the United States, or by any civilized nation in modern times, and higher, as we have just shown, by a minimum of five per cent. than at the termination of the war, the tariff as it stands to-day, fails in a great number of importations, or to give that degree of protection to which persons engaged in almost all branches of domestic industry have represented to Congress that they are rightfully entitled.

The cause of this curious politico-economic phenomenon is undoubtedly due in the first instance to the toleration and use of an innovertible paper currency, which always has did always will work to the prejudice and disadvantage of the industry of every nation which adopts it, in comparison with those nations who recognize only the standard of gold and silver in their commercial transactions. In addition, however, a careful and impartial review of the arrangements and workings of the existing tariff will not fail to satisfy that not a few of the evils which those who advocate a continued increase of duties seek to remedy, have really been occasioned by an indiscriminate and injudicious application of identically the same policy.

The avowed object of the tariff, as revised in 1861, was revenue to provide for the expenses of a great war. Subordinate only to this aim, the other principle of discriminating duties in favor of domestic or home industry,—a principle which may be considered as the present policy of the great majority of the American people, and which, as we have already shown, is recognized and virtually acted upon by all the leading commercial nations of Europe. With the termination of the war, and with accruing receipts from the tariff in excess of the actual requirements of the Treasury, the popular tendency, as expressed by legislation, accomplished or projected, has been to reverse the order of importance of these two principles, and to make the idea of protection paramount to revenue, rather than protection subordinate to revenue. And in carrying out, furthermore, the idea of protection, but one rule for guidance would appear to have been adopted for legislation, viz., the assumption that whatever rate of duty could be shown to be for the advantage of any private interest, the same would prove equally advantageous to the interests of the whole country. The result has been a tariff based upon small issues, rather than upon any great national principle; a tariff which is unjust and unequal; which needlessly enhances prices; which takes far more indirectly from the people than is received into the Treasury; which discourages the exchange of commodities for foreign commodities nearly impossible; which necessitates the continual exportation of obligations of national indebtedness and of the precious metals; and which, while professing to protect American industry, really, in many cases, discriminates against it. But, as it is here, not assertions, that are wanted, let us examine the existing tariff and see if the facts make good the assertions. One of the first things that an analysis will show is, that every interest that has been strong enough or sufficiently persistent to secure efficient representation at Washington, has received a full measure of attention; while every other interest that has not had sufficient strength behind it to prompt its action, has been imperfectly treated or entirely neglected. Thus, let any one glance at the great departments of wool and iron, and he will find that the duties on all the leading products have been carefully increased, harmonized and adjusted, in a great degree, in accordance with the wishes of those interested.

INDISCRIMINATE PROTECTION A CHARACTERISTIC OF THE EXISTING TARIFF.

A characteristic feature of the existing tariff is that it attempts indiscriminate or universal protection—an idea which, if fully carried out, would render all protection a nullity; and to the extent to which it is carried out does more for foreign, as compared with domestic industry, than almost any other one agency.

This will appear evident when we consider that but few products, the results of applied labor and capital, come to the consumer as the result of one process; but nearly all involve several stages or well-defined points of progress, in which the finished product of the one becomes the raw material of the other. If a tax laid under the tariff, with the view of protection, were impartially and universally apportioned—that is, for example, if all duties were levied by one act: ten per cent, prices, after a little, would be affected uniformly—all raw material of foreign production, or those of domestic origin whose price is regulated by a parties foreign supply, would rise equally with the manufactured product, and the cost of production, though pushed to a higher level, would relatively remain as before. If, on the contrary, the distribution of the tax were not made uniform, it is evident that whatever was laid upon a raw material would be equivalent to a reduction of protection to the product which results from its manufacture. But the term "raw material," as above shown, is only a relative expression; so much so that it would be difficult to instance any article, the product of industry, to which it could be absolutely and unqualifiedly applied. Thus, coal is the finished product of the miner, but the raw material for the product of pig iron; pig iron, in turn, becomes the raw material for the manufacture of bar iron; bar iron for machinery, machinery for textile fabrics, textile fabrics for cloth, and clothing for the laborer, whose efforts in the single department of agriculture determine the national prosperity, and, indeed, the very existence of all other forms of industry. It will be found, furthermore, on analysis, that the amount of labor or capital invested or required in the several stages of industry above cited is very disproportionate, and increases very rapidly in the order of enumeration; there being, for example, more individuals employed in the manufacture of clothing, in the City of Boston alone, than there are in all the woolen mills of Massachusetts; while the number of laborers employed in agriculture is far in excess of those in all the industries combined. Hence the necessity in the construction of a tariff, whether the object aimed at be revenue or protection, of the exercise of discrimination; which discrimination, in order that it may be intelligent, must be based, not on a confusion of ideas, or merely on the interest involved, but upon a consideration and knowledge of the relations which the separate interests sustain to the whole, keeping in view at the same time the cardinal doctrine that all legislation approximates to perfection in the degree that it provides for the greatest good of the greatest number. And unless this principle is recognized and adopted, it never can be known, whether the benefit that may follow from the imposition or increase of a particular duty will not be more than counterbalanced by the injury that the same duty may inflict indirectly. In fact, the industrial interests of a highly-civilized country are so mutually inter-connected and inter-dependent as are the diverse parts of the human body, which growth in both cases must be natural, symmetrical, and uniform, or the result will be distortion, rapidity and paralysis.

EFFECT OF THE TARIFF ON SHIPBUILDING AND COMMERCE.

But it is in respect to the absurdity, as well as the ultimate disastrous influence that flows from the carrying out of the principle of universal and indiscriminate protection that the illustrations are the most numerous and significant. What, indeed, can be more instructive than the lesson afforded by the present condition of the shipbuilding interest and the foreign commerce of the United States. There are three things, the imposition of which is theoretically impossible, viz., counterfeit money, indecent publications and ships. In addition to this measure of absolute prohibition of ships there has been superadded, for the benefit of American shipbuilders and shipowners, a bounty in the remission of taxes which follows on all hands, resulting from engaging in the coastwise trade; and yet everyday, speaking generally in respect to ocean traffic, we can neither build, buy, nor sell an American vessel.

This result is obviously due in no small part to the fact that, while protecting the ships, we have also protected to nearly an equal degree the separate constituents of that ship, the construction of ships, viz., the timber, the iron, the copper, the cordage and the canvas; and these two agencies have so far neutralized and counterbalanced each other that neither party, within this particular sphere of industry, has been benefited; the ships not having been built, or the construction of their construction created or applied, while the consumers, whose interest it is that all these branches of industry should prosper, has likewise received no benefit, but rather detriment from the suspension or diversion of labor and capital from its previous employment. The same system, moreover, of checks and balances prevails in respect to the indirect and universal taxation under the tariff which we have thus allowed to exist in shipbuilding, has been also so far extended to every other branch of production, that if ships available for foreign trade were to-day transferred to land, with no cost, their use must be accordingly frustrated, for the reason that the high prices of all domestic commodities would effectually prevent that exchange with foreign countries which in itself constitutes commerce.

The nation during the last few years has rapidly learned to appreciate the effect of a universal and indiscriminate system of internal taxation in the enhancement of prices and in the restriction of production; but it has thus far failed to recognize to the same extent, the inevitable tendency which the adoption of a similar system of taxation under the tariff has to produce results corresponding and analogous.

FUTURE FINANCIAL POLICY.

The ends to be attained are, mainly, three—first, full restoration of the national credit and resumption of specie payments; second, refunding the national debt at a lower rate of interest; third, reduction of the cost of national production, with the view of enabling the products of American industry to come into terms of greater equality with the products of foreign nations than is now possible, thereby establishing a system of national protection and insuring stability, increased production and a development of American commerce and shipbuilding.

Let us now inquire what elements are ready at hand for the accomplishment of these results. The nation at present is excessively indebted, and is rather embarrassed with the volume of its matured and expected payments. To free itself from embarrassment, and to recover the credit which these would seem to be but the one method, when is more available to individuals under similar circumstances, viz., to manage in some way to receive more than is expended, and to apply the surplus of receipts over expenditures to the payment of debts, which is the alteration of one end.

The determination of the practicability of obtaining such a surplus, and also its possible extent, involves the consideration of the national finances, present and prospective, and to the attention a next invited.

NATIONAL RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1868.

The accounts of the National Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, show an aggregate of receipts of $405,638,083 82, and an expenditure of $377,240,284 66, leaving a balance to the credit of current income of $28,397,799 16. In the preceding

Balance in the Treasury, July 1, 1867	$178,696,914 46
From customs (gold)	$164,464,599 16
From internal revenue, derived from the following sources:
From taxes on raw cotton	$35,581,847 77
From taxes on distilled liquors, (including $671,—[illegible] from apples, peaches and grapes)	14,290,759 49
From taxes on fermented liquors	4,695,668 92
From taxes on tobacco	12,864,886 69
From taxes on manufactures of iron	2,071,984 49
From taxes on other manufactures	12,625,759 61
From taxes on sales	4,857,900 38 —109,374,806 52
From taxes on vessels, carriages, plate, playing-cards, billiard-tables, &c.	1,140,370 35
From sales of stamps	14,852,262 03
From special taxes, (licenses)	13,264,147 39
From taxes on income of individuals including salaries	25,975,173 12
From taxes on income of banks, railroad and insurance companies, &c.	6,164,420 18
From taxes on receipts of railroad, telegraph and express companies, &c.	2,251,000 34
From taxes on bank circulation and deposits	1,898,745 59
From taxes on legacies and successions	2,025,411 34
From taxes on passports, &c.	36,200 00
From fines, penalties, &c.	1,256,881 35 —36,008,166 00
	$301,190,084 36
From public lands	1,848,718 41
From direct tax	1,795,149 68
From miscellaneous sources, [illegible] gold, &c., including $1,072,—[illegible] premium on 5-20s and 10-40 bonds	48,948,029 05—52,591,897 14
Total receipts	$576,576,097 73

EXPENDITURES.

For civil service	$20,020,027 07
For pensions and Indians	27,802,020 10
For war, including bounties	124,000,000 00
For navy	21,715,472 72	$193,518,199 11
For interest on public debt	140,628,045 71
For premium on Treasury notes	1,029,351 04—	141,657,396 75
Total expenditures		$377,240,284 66
For redemption of public debt, exclusive of interest	92,022,056 66
Less received from loans	92,121,425 20—	97,495,321 66
Balance in Treasury June 30, 1868, as already stated		128,934,437 84
Transferred to register	98,322 22—	128,836,115 62
Total		$575,576,097 73

*This amount, as given by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, differs from the aggregate of the receipts reported by the Treasurer and given above, and is due to the fact that the same receipts are not entered upon the books of the two offices on the same day.

NATIONAL RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FOR THE CURRENT FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE, 30, 1869.

For the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, the Commissioner estimates the receipts of the National Treasury as follows:

From customs	$170,000,000
From internal revenue	158,000,000
From public lands	1,000,000
From miscellaneous sources	40,000,000
Total	$369,000,000

The total expenditures for the same period, including the interest on the public debt, are estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury as follows:

Civil and miscellaneous, (including $7,200,000 for Alaska)	$61,237,100
War Department (including bounties)	95,236,117
Navy Department	25,000,000
Pensions and Indians	21,858,000
Interest on public debt	129,712,614
Total	$293,193,831

The estimates of total expenditure for the above period as made by the Commissioner are somewhat less than those presented by the Secretary, viz.: $296,300,000, (a reduction of about ten millions,) and indicating a surplus of receipts over expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, according as one or the other of the above estimates be accepted, of from twenty to thirty millions. And it is especially to be noted that the surplus actually attained during the last fiscal year, and the one predicted for the current year, are on the basis of a system of revenue administration, which, to use a very mild expression, has been exceedingly imperfect.

NATIONAL RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1870.

Let us now look forward to the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1869, and ending June 30, 1870, the first complete year of a new Administration; and starting with the relation of receipts and expenditures, as above shown to exist, inquire what it is further possible or practicable to accomplish. Such a basis allows us to anticipate a surplus of thirty millions for the year under consideration, with the law and the administration of the law in relation to the collection and expenditure of revenue remaining unaltered; and this surplus, the Commissioner has reason to believe, may be increased through the following agencies:

First—From the certain and continued gain which will undoubtedly accrue to the national revenue, under any circumstances, from the continued increase of the wealth and population of the country. The amount of such increase in Great Britain for the six years prior to the years 1865-66, is estimated to have averaged $1,750,000 ($8,000,000 per annum. The data for arriving at the increase of wealth in Great Britain, viz., a corporate or of annual receipts, are not, however, at present available in the United States, as the aggregate of taxation in the latter has been materially affected by legislation for nearly every year since the inauguration of the internal revenue system. Nevertheless, it cannot be doubted that the yearly gain from this source is very considerable, especially, as in no year since the commencement of the reduction of the internal revenue taxes have the aggregate receipts of revenue been diminished to an extent commensurate with the corresponding reduction or abatement of taxation. Taking this fact into consideration, and also the fact established by the census returns of the United States, that the annual rate of increase in the value of real and personal property in the United States is considerably greater than that of Great Britain, the Commissioner believes he is warranted in assuming that the gain of revenue likely to accrue from the increase in the wealth and population of the United States, for the present, to be at least $10,000,000 per annum.

Second—A gain in the credit of the treasury from the discontinuance of payment through estimate of the claims of soldiers and sailors for arrears of pay and bounty.

The gain, as predicated on the payments actually made under these heads during the last and current fiscal years, may be estimated at $25,000,000.

Third—A gain from further contraction of national expenditures.

This gain for the next fiscal year through a continued reduction of the army, reconstruction and pacification of the Southern States, and a greater economy in civil expenditures, and in the appropriation annually made for fortifications, ordnance, improvements in harbors and navigation, should be at aggregate at least $30,000,000; especially if the amount paid during the current fiscal year for the purchase of foreign territory ($7,200,000, gold) be carried to the credit of this account.

If we should adopt the estimates of reduction of expenditure which the Secretary of the Treasury has stated in his last report (December, 1868) to be practicable, we should be entitled to the credit of surplus income from a reduction of expenditures would be nearer $50,000,000 than $30,000,000, as above assumed by the Commissioner. Under this head the Secretary says:

"There is no Department of the Government which is conducted with proper economy. The average expenditure for the last three years of civil service, not set to exceed $40,000,000 per annum. Those of the War Department after the bounties are paid, should be brought down to the expenditure of the years prior to $30,000,000. The outlays for pensions and Indians may not for some years be considerably reduced, but there can doubtless be brought within $20,000,000. The interest on the public debt should be reduced, if the debt itself be funded, at an average rate of interest of five per cent, will amount to $125,000,000, which will be reduced with the reduction of the debt to $100,000,000."

Pensions.—In looking forward, furthermore, to the relation which in the future the national receipts are to sustain to the national expenditures, it should be borne in mind that although the amount now annually paid by the Government for pensions is very large, (approximating $25,000,000 per annum,) and may possibly for a year or two longer continue to increase, yet there is nothing more certain than that the expenditure under this head will soon begin to diminish. In proof of this we have only to refer back to the past experience of the Government in regard to this matter. Thus we find that in 1818, the pension roll, the amount annually disbursed for pensions was $188,784; which increased in four years, or in 1820, to $8,208,000; and decreased in the next eight years, or in 1828, to $880,978. Again, at the close of the Mexican war the annual pension expenditure, which was $1,034,000 in 1848, rose in 1850 to $4,637,000, and declined in 1861 to $970,000. If we, therefore, from the past experience of the Government, it will be safe to predict that in the course of the next six or eight years the annual amount disbursed for pensions will be reduced 50 per cent. This effecting a reduction of national expenditures to the extent of from $10,000,000 to $12,500,000 per annum.

Fourth—Gain from reform of revenue administration.

But in addition to whatever of surplus may accrue to the National Treasury through the agencies above cited, a very large increment of receipts can also, unquestionably, be secured by means of a thorough and searching reform in the administration of our internal revenue. It is useless here to enter into any discussion as to the extent of the losses to which the Government is annually subjected, through the positive dishonesty or gross inefficiency of great numbers of the subordinate officials in the collection of the revenue, and often most unsatisfactory, by reason of differences in the nomenclature, diversos, and hours of labor in the different countries, yet some exceedingly interesting results have been secured at.

Manufacture of Cotton.—Average wages of wages paid in the United States in 1867, over those paid for corresponding labor in Great Britain, (gold being taken as the standard in both cases,) 84½ per centum.

A reduction having been made in the wages of some operatives in cotton mills during the present year, 1868, amounting to a general average of five per cent, yet the average wages still the average rate paid in Great Britain [illegible] reduced to 56½ per cent.

In Belgium, from the examination of last accurate data, the average deduction in wages as compared with the United States appears to be about 40 per cent.

In France the average weekly earnings of persons employed in manufactories of cotton are as follows: Men, $4 27; women, $2 57; boys, 87 cents, and girls, $1 94. Taking the 497 men and 1,448 women employed in that branch in Paris, the average weekly wages of adults is 14.38 francs, or $2 66; and including the children the average is 13.23 francs, or $2 44.

Manufacture of Wool.—The average excess of wages paid in woolen mills of the United States in 1867 60, over those paid for similar labor in Great Britain, would appear to be about 52 per cent. (34.58 per centum) and in carpet and other worsted mills 86 per cent.

Pottery.—The average weekly wages of all employes in the manufactories of fire-ware in the United States, Great Britain and France, in the year 1867, were as follows:

In the United States, (Ohio, Sharpsburg and Washington)	$12 00
In England, (Birmingham)	7 72
In France, (Paris)	5 94

In this branch, therefore, the rates of wages in the United States are 56 per cent. more than in England, and 102 per cent. more than in France; while the rates in England are 24 per cent. in excess of those in France.

Iron Founding and Machine Building.—Average excess in wages paid in iron foundries and machine shops in the United States in 1867-68, over those paid for similar labor in England, 58 per cent.

Iron manufacture.—Price of puddling iron per ton in New-England, $48; in New-York, $38 50; New-Jersey, $45; Eastern Pennsylvania, $46; Western Pennsylvania, $46 75; in Western States, $47 50; average price in currency, $46 12½. Average price in gold, United States, $44 37½; England, $32 37½; Belgium, $42 25.

The average weekly earnings of puddlers in the leading iron producing countries are as follows:

United States, (gold)	$18 00
Belgium	8 00
Prussia	4 00
France	4 00
Austria	3 00
Russia, (at the Vielsa iron works)	1 50

Pig-iron.—The following are the average rates of wages paid in the principal pig-iron manufacturing establishments of the countries below enumerated:

In the United States, general average, on gold	$8 41
In Great Britain, general average	4 20
Sheffield $3 36, Hull $4 20, Wigan $4 20, Newcastle $4 20
Bord $2, Clermont $2 75	2 40
Belgium—Liege $2 40, Ghent, in cotton mills $1 92	2 40
Moscow $2 40
Russia, (Sterlitz)	2 40
Prussia, (Berlin)	2 40
Austria, (at the Vielsa iron works)	1 50

COMPARATIVE COST OF PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES AND EUROPE.

Now while the American producer, in these and doubtless in some other respects, labors under great and serious disadvantages as compared with his European competitor, it seems equally clear to the Commissioner, that these disadvantages are not and cannot be compensated for by the adoption of an indiscriminate, arbitrary rule of protection; and that it is in no sense just or wise to suppose that such indiscriminate protection as has heretofore been granted, and seems likely to be further asked for, should be continued.

Thus in most of the tariff discussions that have taken place of late in the United States, the question of the necessity and extent of protection is made to turn almost entirely on the difference in the cost of labor employed in domestic as compared with foreign industry—which difference, as already shown, are certainly very considerable. And it is also very generally taken for granted in such discussions that the nominal rate paid for wages, of itself alone, is the only element to be considered in determining both the cost of production and the social condition and prosperity of the laborer. It is difficult, however, to conceive of a more egregious fallacy than is involved in such assumption; inasmuch as it is not the nominal rate paid for wages, but rather what the labor employed actually produces, and what the money paid will purchase, in respect to the articles for which it is expended, in the form of a supplement.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

DAVID A. WELLS,

Special Commissioner of the Revenue.

Hon. HUGH McCULLOCH, Secretary of the Treasury.

THE OGECHEE TROUBLES.

The Negroes Reported to be Plundering the Plantations—Public Meeting of Citizens.

From the Savannah (Ga.) News, Jan. 1.

The troubles on the Ogeechee plantations continue, and appear to be gaining strength. The negroes are receiving reinforcements from Bryan and Liberty Counties, and trustworthy persons from that section report that they are plundering all the plantations, and threatening destruction to all who dare to meddle with them. They are said to have thrown up some sort of a fortifications at Peach Hill, and have all the roads and approaches strongly guarded.

Major MIDDLETON has been informed that after robbing his house of its contents, the negroes returned on Wednesday night and burned the dwelling. Whether the report is true or not we cannot say, but there is every reason to believe it is true. Some time last year, on the Mr. HAZEHURST's Southfield plantation, which Mr. MIDDLETON has been planting, it was one of the finest mansions on the Ogeechee, was two stories high and about fifty feet square, and arranged with regard to the comfort and convenience of those who might occupy it.

Now that the families of the persons driven away are in safety in this city, there is no immediate anxiety on the public mind, save for a vindication of the law, and the stifling of the disorder in the bud. Immediately, we if has had time to spread further. For this there is great anxiety, and a concerted effort is to be made.

The Gulf Railroad train stopped at No. 3½ last evening, as usual, but brought no passengers from that section. At No. 1 all was quiet at the time.

The negroes have seized the canoe and skiffs, and carried of the rice. It appears that they have been urged to their present course of action by persons who have made them believe that they had been assured by Radical negroes in Washington that if the negroes once captured and held the country, they would be confirmed in possession of it. The regular hands employed by Messrs. HAZEHURST & TUCKER are being commanded by Lieutenants who work for nobody.

Sheriff DOUGHS went down to No. 1 early yesterday morning with a pretty strong force, but on reaching there, and learning that the negroes were out in force, he concluded to return to the city to call in a sufficient force to disperse the lawless parties engaged in defying the law, and plundering the proposed peaceful citizens. The Sheriff was advised to pursue this course by prudent counselors, whose advice was weighty and convincing. The return was made about 4 o'clock, and it was 8 o'clock, or thereabouts, before the gallant band got back to the city. The force was not large enough to carry out the law, hence their return.

Major MIDDLETON issued a call for a public meeting to take the matter in consideration. At 1:30 a large number of young men, and a few old and prominent citizens had assembled at the Court House, to devise measures for enforcing the law, and advising as to the best course to pursue. We are sorry to say that the men most closely interested in the matter did not come out as they should have done on such an important occasion. Not having received notice of the meeting, may have been the cause of this absence of prominent citizens.

Major MIDDLETON said there was no necessity for a regularly-organized meeting. He had called upon the citizens to come to the Court-house to hear of the state of affairs upon the Ogeechee. The newspapers had given a true account of it, but it was even worse than represented. The negroes were in strong force and well armed by the party which went down in the morning. After consultation between the Sheriff and gentlemen who were present, it had been thought proper to return to town and make a formidable demonstration. He had no exception to make to the acts of any man in the post. They all did their duty, and were willing to do anything that might be required of them. Some of them did not like being ordered back, but it was the wisest plan, under the circumstances. The negroes had burned Mr. HAZEHURST's house, where he, (the speaker) lived, sacked the barns, and taken all his property. He thought arrangements could be made to overcome the negroes without trouble or resistance. If this state of affairs was allowed to go on, it would spread from the Ogeechee to the Savannah. He said the posse did all in its power, but a large force was needed.

Gen. HENRY R. JACKSON said the negroes had violated the law; warrants had been issued for their arrest, and the Sheriff attempted to execute those warrants, and had failed. He had appealed to his posse, constitutes. In the eye of the law a posse constitutes in any number of men who may be about the Sheriff at the time of the arrest, upon whom he may call in case of resistance of his authority. The posse constitutes had passed, and why? The negroes were to large armed posses, and country a large incorporated political, and, so far as they can assimilate to a force in the field, they are one. The assistant would not be confined to the plantations on the Ogeechee, but would extend to the Savannah. And what then becomes of the City of Savannah, surrounded on all sides by an armed and hostile mob? She would be ruined. Not a train could pass out on the railroads, nor could people travel on the roads. Capital, which has fed these people, who are now deriving sustenance from plunder, would cease to be invested here. We are warring against benefits, armed desperadoes, who are ruining the city. The best moment to stop the mischief is now! And we must begin to effect this, meet organization by organization, force by force. Men and time and means were necessary, also arms and money. The City of Savannah must furnish them. We must act as one man, and if we do not identify ourselves with those more immediately interested, we are but worthy to be called men. If, at 3 o'clock, a meeting for to-morrow (this) morning to organize such a force, with such means as would enable us to crush out the insurrection, Gen. HAGAN had promised the aid of the military, and we must prove that we are men enough to take care of ourselves.

On motion of Gen. JACKSON it was received unanimously to call a public meeting of citizens to be held at 12 o'clock to-day, at the Court-house. The meeting then adjourned.

Arrangements are being perfected, we learn, which will insure success in the next undertaking.

POISON FOR THE PEOPLE.

From the London Saturday Review.

We remember nothing in the darkest pages of EUGENE SUE or VICTOR HUGO to compare with the disclosures of the trial which has just ended at Aix in the conviction of the six poisoners. They startle one with a glimpse of the underworld hitherto that may underlie the every-day life of a bustling city. Nothing can be more unfair than to generalize on the character of a whole people from crimes committed individually, or even in detached groups. It is absurd to take a monster for your text, to assume his moral identity with his neighbors, and then to preach in these words his life is a homily of reproof and warning. But this Marseilles poisoning case is eminently suggestive, and there are points in it which make it no breach of charity to suspect that the convicted criminals are only the scapegoats of a system. At the same time, even if we are driven to attribute constituents about the tone of morality that must prevail very generally among certain classes at Marseilles, still we ought to remember that Marseilles is not France; that the Provencal has an added characteristic of his own, which gained him an infamous notoriety even among the water-thieves of the Revolution; that, for good or evil, he is as different from the Picard, the Norman, the Champenois, or any of the Northern races, as is the Cockney of Clerkenwell from the Celt of Connaught. If we can ever, without injustice, infer on localizing particular crimes, we may say that poisoning is as an art, like [illegible] domiciled Italy anywhere out of the South. It was under the enlightened patronage of the petty Italian Courts, culminating in the unrivalled liberality of the Borgias, that the adepts of the middle ages attained their ingenious eminence in it. Twice, at least, before this has it threatened to establish itself as an institution in France, but each time, like other foreign fashions, it confirmed itself to the Court, and it owed its introduction to foreign influence. Under the Florentine CATHERINE DE MEDICIS, the Court, with its perfumes, invented his craft with a mysterious poetry, and gracefully gave his victims their death in a bouquet, a posset, or a pair of embroidered gloves. Perhaps for lack of concentrated genius, these delicate art died out, and the refinement of the age, at a much lost in the world, in those of its lowest orders, painting its reason. When poisoning was revived in the Salons in France, rather unsuitableness made use of the drugs that are now familiar to modern science. The Great Monarch was at the nadir of his glory when the trade became so profitable as to support several rival professors. While Madame CHOISY and Madame VENTHAMAR, poisoned for LA VOISIN and LA SAGE, and LA VOISIN, in her business. When facts things became too notorious, and people spoke out, among the parvenu implicated were a Prince of the royal blood, a Marshal of the realm, the Receiver-General of the clergy and the minister of the King, but ones more Italians were to be the chief actors in the two sisters MAILLOT, the Countess, per Chamberlain, the Duchess DE BOUILLON. Under LOUIS XV., as under CHARLES IX., the moral tone of the Court was horribly lowered; but at least poisoning was a luxury that came only within the means of the wealthy, and that the crime was atrocious, and the danger of perpetrating it considerable, it was inspired in the same proportion as the temptation was powerful. With all the patronage of the powerful, it was too hazardous to be risked without proportionate recompense. It seems to mark a more serious state of things when people found it worth their while to make it a trade, looking for their fee to what selling same the poorest classes can offer

WASHINGTON.

Particulars of the Negotiations for the Islands of St. Thomas.

Debate in the Senate Relative to the Amnesty Proclamation.

The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill in the House.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The documents in connection with the St. Thomas treaty are all of confidential character, but so much has recently been said about them in private conversation here, that some of their leading points may be given. It appears that negotiations for the purchase of the Danish islands were begun four years ago, during Mr. Johnson's administration, when Mr. Seward made proposals for them, saying they were wanted by our country for a naval station. The Danish Minister did not think at all favorably of the proposition, but of course forwarded it to his Government. From the King of Denmark through his Foreign Secretary, there soon came answer that the islands were not for sale, and that it had not considered advisable to entertain the proposition. Then followed the death of Mr. Johnson, the accession of Mr. Sumner and a change in the Danish home Government, and in the Fall of 1865 Mr. Seward renewed his proposal. New influences were about the King of Denmark, and he decided, to the effect that while he still had no desire to sell, the United States might make it for his pecuniary advantage to do so. A period of silence or inaction seems to have followed. But in 1866, just as the Danish Minister was going home on leave of absence, Mr. Seward put into his hands a letter, in which he offered $7,000,000 for the three islands. This was duly laid before the King of Denmark, and he made answer that the price was not sufficient. In the Winter of 1866 Mr. Fred. Seward made his trip to St. Thomas, and when he returned our Secretary of State was more than ever anxious to buy the islands, and in the Spring of 1867, the matter began to take the shape it finally assumed. The Danish Government from the first, as the correspondence shows, was very loth to negotiate, and seems to have sometimes doubted whether Mr. Seward would be sustained by the legislative branch of the Government. The Secretary, however, represented that the Executive had complete right to make the treaty; that there was no doubt of its ratification by the Senate, and that the House and the country would acquiesce the action of the Senate. The Secretary of the Navy had formally recommended the purchase of the islands. The Assistant Secretary was a strong advocate of the treaty. Two or three prominent Senators had declared for it. Mr. Thad. Stevens had made a speech in the House showing his confidence in Secretary Seward, and had asserted that body with him on an important question of money. The fact that negotiations were going on had become public, and was commented upon by our newspapers without hostility to the idea of purchase, and the Danish Minister finally became persuaded that the country really wanted the islands, and that Mr. Seward was correct in his view that the treaty would at once be ratified as a matter of course. This being the situation it was not difficult to reach an understanding, and our offer of seven and a half millions was accepted. The Danish Government refused, however, point blank to sign the treaty unless the people of St. Thomas were willing to be transferred to the United States, being moved to this refusal by considerations of home policy. Mr. Seward did not attach this of consequence, but finally consented, and, under circumstances that will readily be recalled, the inhabitants of the island voted almost unanimously for the transfer. The treaty was signed in October, 1867, and laid before the Senate in the following December, more than thirteen months ago. The ratifications were to have been exchanged in February, 1868, and proper action was accordingly taken by the Danish Government. No action whatever has yet been taken by our Senate, or even by the Foreign Relations Committee. The Danish authorities feel that they have been very badly used. They say that good faith of both countries, ours and theirs, is involved in the transaction. They have, to oblige our Government, sold islands that they had no wish to sell. They have carried out their part of obligations entered into after long negotiation, and they now say that we shall meet our part of the bargain to which they consider our national honor has been pledged by the Administration acting through Mr. Seward. The Secretary admits the force of this view, so does Mr. Sumner, and there is reason to believe that it is entertained by other Congressmen of both branches. It is pretty certain that the subject will be discussed before the end of the Session, in open as well as in secret Senate proceedings.

CONGRESS.

There was an unexpectedly large attendance in the House when it was called to order this morning, and business went on as though it had not been interrupted. The result of the day's session was not productive of anything important. However, a great number of bills were introduced, many more than will see daylight at this session, inasmuch as it is hardly possible that the entire list of committees will be called even once before the 4th of March. So many special orders are now on the calendar, that the morning hour, in which reports from committees are made, will frequently be crowded out of the legislative day entirely. The number of bills introduced this term exceeds that of any Congress for many years; and when the vast amount of useless printing is contemplated, it may well be asked if Congress, in carrying out its ideas of retrenchment, cannot save a million or more by reducing the amount of its printed matter.

DISCUSSIONS IN THE SENATE.

There were two interesting discussions in the Senate to-day—one on the constitutional right of the President to issue the late amnesty proclamation in time of peace, and the other on a Southern claim for compensation for property appropriated by the United States forces during the recent rebellion. The former originated on the introduction of a resolution by Senator Fessenden, calling on the President for a copy of the proclamation and for the authority under which it was issued. Senators Fessenden and Conkling, Doolittle and Davis engaged in some hair-splitting on the difference in meaning between the words "reprieve" and "pardon" and "amnesty," and on some nice points of law which they held were involved in the case. In the case of the Southern claim Mr. Fessenden opposed it on the usual grounds covered by the terms—the laws of war. But Mr. Howe took a higher ground, and held that all property is subject to the military necessities of a Government, in time of war, as well as in time of peace, and was bound to pay for everything it used. Mr. Conkling made a strong speech against the claim, after which the adjournment took place.

THE TARIFF BILL.

It has been stated that the Tariff Bill, now in Committee of the Whole in the House, is to be withdrawn and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means for revision. It is not probable that this will be done. The friends of the Tariff do not want it done, because of the delay which will cause, to its damage. The opponents think it can be defeated more easily by loading it with objectionable amendments, and by inflaming the hostility of the rival interests, which will demand protection. In any event it will have hard work to pass both Houses and the gauntlet of Andrew Johnson's veto before the 4th of March next.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. Washburne presented two of the Appropriation bills to-day—that for the Pension and the Consular and Diplomatic. There is little change in these from last year. The latter reduces the total for that service about $100,000. An amendment is added which provides that hereafter no Consular officer in Canada shall be allowed fees, salary or emoluments for services rendered British citizens, while the Pension bill comes up in Committee next week. When the Pension bill comes up in the House Mr. Washburne will produce its consideration by a brief speech upon the financial condition of the Government. He will present a comprehensive balance sheet of the receipts and expenditures for the past two years, and of the estimates for the next fiscal year, and he will endeavor to impress upon Congress the necessity of cutting down expenses everywhere, and of reducing the civil service in every branch, in order to enable the new administration to begin its career with a prospect of success.

STEAMSHIP LINE TO MEXICO.

A bill was introduced in the Senate to-day by Senator Pomeroy, providing for the establishment of a steam mail service between New-York and Sisal and Vera Cruz, Mexico, to sail at least once a week, with a subsidy of $5,000 for the round trip.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The abuse of the franking privilege was the subject of a considerable debate in the House to-day. Messrs. Lynch, Gary and Baldwin made personal explanations on the subject. Mr. Lynch completely refuted the charge against him of improperly using his frank, and scored Mr. Darrows, the editor of the Worcester Spy, which paper had assailed him unjustly, with so much vigor that it brought that gentleman to his feet, who not only disclaimed all intention of doing Mr. Lynch injustice, but repudiated the article itself, which he said he did not write.

NEWSPAPER REPORTS.

Mr. Farnsworth, of Illinois, made a sensible point this morning when he objected to the resolution of Mr. Ela, of New-Hampshire, proposing to investigate a certain newspaper statement about a post route contract in Arizona. He said he thought it was about time for the House to stop this matter of taking up every irresponsible statement that appeared in the newspapers, and dignifying it by an investigation, as if it proceeded from a source entitled to credence. The House will by and by learn that many of the statements which are brought to its notice are the off-spring of a purely malevolent spirit, and are seldom based upon a single material fact.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

The parties who obtained from the Legislature of New-York last Winter the exclusive right to land a cable upon the shores of that State, and subsequently sold that right to some French capitalists, may be interested in the joint resolution introduced into the Senate to-day by Mr. Morton and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, prohibiting the landing of such cables.

THE NAVAL ENGINEERS-IN-CHIEF.

A bill passed the House to-day, reported from the Naval Committee by Judge Kelly, providing that the President may hereafter, in the appointment of an Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, make such appointment if he see fit, from civil life. Heretofore the selection has, by law, been restricted to the Board of Chief Engineers of the Navy.

THE NEW-YORK ELECTION FRAUDS.

The Congress Committee who have charge of the investigation of the election frauds in New-York, have taken a large mass of testimony which goes to show the perpetration of immense frauds in New-York City. The Committee will not be able to finish their labors before twelve or fourteen days, but a partial report will be made to the House at the end of the week and leave taken to have the evidence taken so far printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

The claim of Mrs. Murphy, of Decatur, Ala., for compensation for alleged losses sustained by the seizure of her property, during the rebellion, by the United States forces, which came up in the Senate to-day, is but the forerunner of many thousand other demands of a similar character. Should this claim be allowed it will be a precedent which, if followed, will rob the Treasury of an amount of money at present impossible to calculate. Senator Brown states that the whole amount will not exceed $500,000, but others are of the opinion that it will number as many millions. More than one-quarter of these claims are now held by brokers and speculators.

EVENING RECEPTIONS.

Secretary and Mrs. Moulton have issued cards for three evening receptions to occur respectively on the 8th and 22d of January, and on the 5th of February.

MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

The Methodist Episcopal Missionary demonstration will be inaugurated here on next Sunday by imposing ceremonies. Bishop Ames will preach in the morning at one of the churches. Judge Fisher will deliver an opening address, and Chief Justice Chase will preside at an evening celebration. Bishop James is also announced to speak, together with several other distinguished ministers.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

GEN. GRANT AND THE PRINTERS.

At noon to-day the members of the Printers' Grant and Colfax Club, numbering about one hundred, called at the Headquarters of the Army of the United States, for the purpose of presenting to Gen. Grant a congratulatory letter of their Club, which had been engrossed on parchment, signed by all the members, and neatly framed. Gen. Grant met these gentlemen in the reception-room at headquarters, and after a short speech from Charles B. Lathrop, Esq., foreman of the Public Printing Office and President of the Club, the members were individually presented, and shook hands with the General. At the conclusion of the formality, Gen. Grant said:

"I thank you for this manifestation of your sentiments. I do not know of anything more that I can say, than that I am glad to have had the support of all classes, and particularly of those who are finding employment under the Government. I hope there will be nothing in my course hereafter to make you regret the present you have seen fit to give."

GEN. SPINNER.

Gen. Spinner still remains very unwell, and is unable to be at his desk at the Treasury Department.

TROOPS IN THE INDIAN COUNTRY.

In compliance with the Senate resolution of the 14th ultimo, the Secretary of War to-day transmitted to the Senate a statement as to the number of United States troops employed in connection with the Indian hostilities in protecting the Missouri River traffic and the Union Pacific Railroad, and otherwise policing that region of the country, of which the following is a recapitulation:

"Number of regular troops employed in guarding and protecting the frontier, 10,063; operating against the Indians and policing the frontier, 8,624; operating against the Indians, 2,119; guarding the Union Pacific Railroad and policing the frontier, 667; guarding the Union Pacific Railroad, 426; guarding the works on the Missouri River, 1,825; operating against the Indians and guarding the Union Pacific Railroad, 6,859. Total regular troops, 26,601. Add volunteer troops, 1,213—aggregate 26,814."

FORTIETH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Senate resumed its session at 12 o'clock, the following named Senators being present: Buckalew, Cattell, Cole, Conkling, Dixon, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kellogg, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Nye, Patterson of New-Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sherbury, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Vickers, Wade, Warner, Willey, Williams, Wilson.

COMMUNICATIONS PRESENTED.

The President laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the number of troops, regular and volunteer, employed in service against the Indians. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue, Mr. D. A. Wells, and asking the attention of Congress to his recommendations. Referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Sumner offered a resolution to order the printing of 20,000 copies of the report, for the use of the Senate. Referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.

Mr. Sumner presented several petitions of citizens of Virginia, asking the removal of their political disabilities. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of Hungarian citizens in the United States, praying for the establishment of a Consulate General of the United States at Buda, Pesth. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of the University of Virginia, praying the remission of duties upon certain apparatus ordered from Europe. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of citizens of Philadelphia and Louisiana for a constitutional amendment securing equal political rights to all citizens.

Also, a petition of citizens of Georgia, setting forth the troubled state of things existing in that State, and praying the intervention of Congress. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Pomeroy presented a petition for the passage of a Civil Service bill, the framers of the British Speech to the War Ministry, and in general economy in every department of the Government. Which was referred.

SURRENDER CASES.

Mr. Morton offered a joint resolution forbidding the landing in any submarine cable in any part of the territory of the United States without the consent of Congress. Referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

Mr. Conkling introduced a bill to authorize the New-York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company to lend some or more submarine cables upon the shores of the United States and to construct and work such cables for the transmission of messages and intelligence between the United States and Europe, or any of the intermediate places, during the existence of the Company's charter. Referred to the Committee of Commerce.

THE AMNESTY PROCLAMATION.

Mr. Ferry offered a resolution requesting the President to transmit a copy of his late amnesty proclamation, with a statement of the authority by which he issued it. Mr. Ferry said that he offered the resolution in order, although he favored the amnesty, he doubted the right of the President to grant it in this sweeping way, and he wished to have the question settled.

Mr. Howard was very glad that the attention of the Senate had been called to the question. He thought it important that the people of the United States should know whether the President had such dispensing power as was implied in the force of this proclamation. He believed that the assumption by the Executive of such a power was entirely unwarranted by the Constitution.

Mr. Fessenden also was glad that attention was called to the subject. He thought it was more important as relating a great question as regard to the powers of the Executive than in any other respect. He did not find in the Constitution a grant of any such power as the President claimed in the case, nor power to grant amnesty at all. In England the King had such power, but that was become he represented the sovereignty of the nation against which the offence is committed. There it is The King vs. A. B., but in the United States it is not The People vs. A. B., but it is The United States vs.

Mr. Doolittle remarked that, even in England, of late years, it has never been insisted that the King had a right to pardon by general proclamation without naming anybody pardoned. The President's proclamation assumed not merely that he had a right to pardon A B, charged with an offence, but also that he had a right to pardon, by a single act, clemency to all persons whatever. If that assumption is correct, then the Governor of New-York has a right to pardon and set free all persons accused or suspected of burglary, arson and murder, or any other crimes—a power never exercised and never claimed.

Mr. Doolittle said the Supreme Court had expressly decided in the case of Garland that the President had power, by general proclamation, at any time after the commission of the offence, before legal proceedings or during their pendency, as well as after as before conviction, to pardon offences, and that Congress had no right to prevent the exercise of that power, in the exercise of which the President does represent the sovereignty of the people of the United States. He read from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Garland case in support of his position.

Mr. Conkling inquired whether it was decided in the Garland case that the President could pardon in advance of conviction.

Mr. Doolittle replied that he believed that Garland was pardoned under such a general proclamation.

Mr. Ferry asked whether the Senator made any distinction between pardon and amnesty.

Mr. Doolittle said no; the question whether the persons pardoned were named in the proclamation, in his opinion, was immaterial. He had not been decided by the Court, because no one has thought of raising it. The President having the right to pardon one offender, did, as a matter of course, a right to pardon accomplices, or several persons together, guilty of or accused of the same offence.

Mr. Davis approved of the resolution of inquiry, because it was important that Congress had not been in doubt of the President's right to grant the amnesty, the Constitution vesting such power wholly in the President, not at all in Congress. He thought there could be no doubt of the right to pardon before conviction as well as after.

Mr. Howe said he was glad to find the question in the Garland case did not go so far as Mr. Doolittle thought it did. The question, he said, was not whether the President could pardon a man for an offence, but whether he could time pardon all men for all offences—a very important question.

Mr. Doolittle said that he had been mistaken in saying the Garland case was pardoned under a general amnesty without being named, but he held the decision in that case to be that the power of the President to pardon and grant respites, except in the case of impeachment, is unlimited.

The question was then taken upon the resolution and it was adopted.

A NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. Wilson introduced a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency, secured by pledge of public stocks, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Section one provides that the Comptroller of the Currency shall receive and hold in custody, without charge, for a period of not more than ninety days to be by him specified, and such report shall be made within five days after the expiration of the specified time, with a penalty of $100 for every day's delay of such report. After the said five days, duplicate of such report shall be published by the Comptroller in a newspaper in the City of Philadelphia, and in a newspaper in the place where the Association is established, or in the nearest place where a newspaper is published, in the opinion of the Association making said report. Each Association is required to report to the Comptroller on the first Tuesday of each month, the condition of its affairs, including the preceding day, and statements shall include a report of loans and discounts, specie deposits, and circulation.

Mr. Pomeroy introduced a bill to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship lines between the United States and Mexico, which was referred to the Committee of Post Offices and Roads.

It authorizes the Postmaster-General to make contracts, to continue not exceeding ten years, for the transportation of all mailable matter between New-York and Sisal and Vera Cruz, Mexico, by such responsible parties possessing ample ability to furnish the necessary steamships, provided that he requires the department of a mail steamship from New-York at least once in three weeks, and that the compensation for such service shall not exceed $5,000 per round trip. In case of failure to perform regular voyages, a pro rata deduction is to be made from the compensation, and fines and penalties may also be imposed for delays and irregularities in the performance of service according to contract.

GEORGIA RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. Stewart introduced a bill to enable the people of Georgia to form a State Government, republican in form, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

It provides for the repealing of so much of the act of June 25, 1868, as relates to Georgia, and making the Government of Georgia provisional only, and subject to the act of March 2, 1867. All officers, civil and military, except members of the Legislature, shall continue in office until the State be fully restored in all its relations to the Union, and the Convention, elected under the laws of Congress to form a State Constitution, as are not disfranchised, shall assemble on the 1st Monday in December next, with full power to alter or amend said Constitution, provided the same conflict with the laws of Congress and the Constitution. Said State Constitution, so amended, shall be submitted to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection, as may appoint; and on satisfaction or rejection of said amended Constitution, such persons and no others shall vote as shall have the qualifications of said Constitution, provided that no person shall be excluded from voting on account of race or color. When said amended Constitution shall have been submitted by a majority of the electors, it may be submitted for the consideration of Congress.

PUNISHMENT OF CRIMES.

Mr. Sumner introduced a bill providing that accessories to a violation of the fifty-fifth section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be punished as the principal of the association.

Also a bill declaring that the words "trial at common law" in the first section of act of July, 1868, relating to the competency of witnesses, shall be held to include criminal trials and proceedings; also, a joint resolution to repeal the act of Congress with hard labor in cases where the law merely provides for imprisonment; also a bill to regulate prosecutions under the laws of the United States for embezzling and kindred offences, making a general allegation of embezzlement, &c., sufficient in the indictment and making no restriction as to the amount embezzled; also a bill to repeal the act of Feb. 18, 1868, prohibiting the importation of persons from foreign countries, all of which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Sumner also introduced a bill to provide for the execution, in the District of Columbia, of commissions issued by the Courts of the States and Territories and of foreign nations and for taking depositions to be used in such Courts. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Also a bill to provide for the punishment of accessories in criminal offences against the United States. Referred to the Committee of the Judiciary.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. Howe called up the bill for the relief of Mrs. Murphy, of Decatur, Ala.

Messrs. Fessenden and Howard read arguments against allowing the claim, taking the general ground that the Government was not bound to indemnify persons for losses inflicted by the war.

Mr. Howe advocated the claim upon the ground that even if the Government were not obliged to pay the losses inflicted by the army, it certainly was obliged to pay for property of loyal citizens taken and used by itself.

Mr. Conkling made an argument against paying the claim.

Without voting upon the bill the Senate, at 3:45, went into Executive Session, after which it went upon session was held, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker announced that the veto having expired, the House resumed its session.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1870.

Mr. Bingham gave a brief exposition of votes, historical and explanatory of Condition work. When the Pensions bill comes up in Committee Mr. Washburne will produce its consideration by a brief speech upon the financial condition of the Government. He will present a comprehensive balance sheet of the receipts and expenditures for the past two years, and of the estimates for the next fiscal year, and he will endeavor to impress upon Congress the necessity of cutting down expenses everywhere, and of reducing the civil service in every branch, in order to enable the new administration to begin its career with a prospect of success.

STEAMSHIP LINE TO MEXICO.

A bill was introduced in the Senate to-day by Senator Pomeroy, providing for the establishment of a steam mail service between New-York and Sisal and Vera Cruz, Mexico, to sail at least once a week, with a subsidy of $5,000 for the round trip.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The abuse of the franking privilege was the subject of a considerable debate in the House to-day. Messrs. Lynch, Gary and Baldwin made personal explanations on the subject. Mr. Lynch completely refuted the charge against him of improperly using his frank, and scored Mr. Darrows, the editor of the Worcester Spy, which paper had assailed him unjustly, with so much vigor that it brought that gentleman to his feet, who not only disclaimed all intention of doing Mr. Lynch injustice, but repudiated the article itself, which he said he did not write.

NEWSPAPER REPORTS.

Mr. Farnsworth, of Illinois, made a sensible point this morning when he objected to the resolution of Mr. Ela, of New-Hampshire, proposing to investigate a certain newspaper statement about a post route contract in Arizona. He said he thought it was about time for the House to stop this matter of taking up every irresponsible statement that appeared in the newspapers, and dignifying it by an investigation, as if it proceeded from a source entitled to credence. The House will by and by learn that many of the statements which are brought to its notice are the off-spring of a purely malevolent spirit, and are seldom based upon a single material fact.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

The parties who obtained from the Legislature of New-York last Winter the exclusive right to land a cable upon the shores of that State, and subsequently sold that right to some French capitalists, may be interested in the joint resolution introduced into the Senate to-day by Mr. Morton and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, prohibiting the landing of such cables.

THE NAVAL ENGINEERS-IN-CHIEF.

A bill passed the House to-day, reported from the Naval Committee by Judge Kelly, providing that the President may hereafter, in the appointment of an Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, make such appointment if he see fit, from civil life. Heretofore the selection has, by law, been restricted to the Board of Chief Engineers of the Navy.

THE NEW-YORK ELECTION FRAUDS.

The Congress Committee who have charge of the investigation of the election frauds in New-York, have taken a large mass of testimony which goes to show the perpetration of immense frauds in New-York City. The Committee will not be able to finish their labors before twelve or fourteen days, but a partial report will be made to the House at the end of the week and leave taken to have the evidence taken so far printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

The claim of Mrs. Murphy, of Decatur, Ala., for compensation for alleged losses sustained by the seizure of her property, during the rebellion, by the United States forces, which came up in the Senate to-day, is but the forerunner of many thousand other demands of a similar character. Should this claim be allowed it will be a precedent which, if followed, will rob the Treasury of an amount of money at present impossible to calculate. Senator Brown states that the whole amount will not exceed $500,000, but others are of the opinion that it will number as many millions. More than one-quarter of these claims are now held by brokers and speculators.

EVENING RECEPTIONS.

Secretary and Mrs. Moulton have issued cards for three evening receptions to occur respectively on the 8th and 22d of January, and on the 5th of February.

MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

The Methodist Episcopal Missionary demonstration will be inaugurated here on next Sunday by imposing ceremonies. Bishop Ames will preach in the morning at one of the churches. Judge Fisher will deliver an opening address, and Chief Justice Chase will preside at an evening celebration. Bishop James is also announced to speak, together with several other distinguished ministers.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

GEN. GRANT AND THE PRINTERS.

At noon to-day the members of the Printers' Grant and Colfax Club, numbering about one hundred, called at the Headquarters of the Army of the United States, for the purpose of presenting to Gen. Grant a congratulatory letter of their Club, which had been engrossed on parchment, signed by all the members, and neatly framed. Gen. Grant met these gentlemen in the reception-room at headquarters, and after a short speech from Charles B. Lathrop, Esq., foreman of the Public Printing Office and President of the Club, the members were individually presented, and shook hands with the General. At the conclusion of the formality, Gen. Grant said:

"I thank you for this manifestation of your sentiments. I do not know of anything more that I can say, than that I am glad to have had the support of all classes, and particularly of those who are finding employment under the Government. I hope there will be nothing in my course hereafter to make you regret the present you have seen fit to give."

GEN. SPINNER.

Gen. Spinner still remains very unwell, and is unable to be at his desk at the Treasury Department.

TROOPS IN THE INDIAN COUNTRY.

In compliance with the Senate resolution of the 14th ultimo, the Secretary of War to-day transmitted to the Senate a statement as to the number of United States troops employed in connection with the Indian hostilities in protecting the Missouri River traffic and the Union Pacific Railroad, and otherwise policing that region of the country, of which the following is a recapitulation:

"Number of regular troops employed in guarding and protecting the frontier, 10,063; operating against the Indians and policing the frontier, 8,624; operating against the Indians, 2,119; guarding the Union Pacific Railroad and policing the frontier, 667; guarding the Union Pacific Railroad, 426; guarding the works on the Missouri River, 1,825; operating against the Indians and guarding the Union Pacific Railroad, 6,859. Total regular troops, 26,601. Add volunteer troops, 1,213—aggregate 26,814."

FORTIETH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Senate resumed its session at 12 o'clock, the following named Senators being present: Buckalew, Cattell, Cole, Conkling, Dixon, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kellogg, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Nye, Patterson of New-Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Sherbury, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Vickers, Wade, Warner, Willey, Williams, Wilson.

COMMUNICATIONS PRESENTED.

The President laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the number of troops, regular and volunteer, employed in service against the Indians. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue, Mr. D. A. Wells, and asking the attention of Congress to his recommendations. Referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Sumner offered a resolution to order the printing of 20,000 copies of the report, for the use of the Senate. Referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.

Mr. Sumner presented several petitions of citizens of Virginia, asking the removal of their political disabilities. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of Hungarian citizens in the United States, praying for the establishment of a Consulate General of the United States at Buda, Pesth. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of the University of Virginia, praying the remission of duties upon certain apparatus ordered from Europe. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of citizens of Philadelphia and Louisiana for a constitutional amendment securing equal political rights to all citizens.

Also, a petition of citizens of Georgia, setting forth the troubled state of things existing in that State, and praying the intervention of Congress. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Pomeroy presented a petition for the passage of a Civil Service bill, the framers of the British Speech to the War Ministry, and in general economy in every department of the Government. Which was referred.

SURRENDER CASES.

Mr. Morton offered a joint resolution forbidding the landing in any submarine cable in any part of the territory of the United States without the consent of Congress. Referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

Mr. Conkling introduced a bill to authorize the New-York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company to lend some or more submarine cables upon the shores of the United States and to construct and work such cables for the transmission of messages and intelligence between the United States and Europe, or any of the intermediate places, during the existence of the Company's charter. Referred to the Committee of Commerce.

THE AMNESTY PROCLAMATION.

Mr. Ferry offered a resolution requesting the President to transmit a copy of his late amnesty proclamation, with a statement of the authority by which he issued it. Mr. Ferry said that he offered the resolution in order, although he favored the amnesty, he doubted the right of the President to grant it in this sweeping way, and he wished to have the question settled.

Mr. Howard was very glad that the attention of the Senate had been called to the question. He thought it important that the people of the United States should know whether the President had such dispensing power as was implied in the force of this proclamation. He believed that the assumption by the Executive of such a power was entirely unwarranted by the Constitution.

Mr. Fessenden also was glad that attention was called to the subject. He thought it was more important as relating a great question in regard to the powers of the Executive than in any other respect. He did not find in the Constitution a grant of any such power as the President claimed in the case, nor power to grant amnesty at all. In England the King had such power, but that was become he represented the sovereignty of the nation against which the offence is committed. There it is The King vs. A. B., but in the United States it is not The People vs. A. B., but it is The United States vs.

Mr. Doolittle remarked that, even in England, of late years, it has never been insisted that the King had a right to pardon by general proclamation without naming anybody pardoned. The President's proclamation assumed not merely that he had a right to pardon A B, charged with an offence, but also that he had a right to pardon, by a single act, clemency to all persons whatever. If that assumption is correct, then the Governor of New-York has a right to pardon and set free all persons accused or suspected of burglary, arson and murder, or any other crimes—a power never exercised and never claimed.

Mr. Doolittle said the Supreme Court had expressly decided in the case of Garland that the President had power, by general proclamation, at any time after the commission of the offence, before legal proceedings or during their pendency, as well as after as before conviction, to pardon offences, and that Congress had no right to prevent the exercise of that power, in the exercise of which the President does represent the sovereignty of the people of the United States. He read from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Garland case in support of his position.

Mr. Conkling inquired whether it was decided in the Garland case that the President could pardon in advance of conviction.

Mr. Doolittle replied that he believed that Garland was pardoned under such a general proclamation.

Mr. Ferry asked whether the Senator made any distinction between pardon and amnesty.

Mr. Doolittle said no; the question whether the persons pardoned were named in the proclamation, in his opinion, was immaterial. He had not been decided by the Court, because no one has thought of raising it. The President having the right to pardon one offender, did, as a matter of course, a right to pardon accomplices, or several persons together, guilty of or accused of the same offence.

Mr. Davis approved of the resolution of inquiry, because it was important that Congress had not been in doubt of the President's right to grant the amnesty, the Constitution vesting such power wholly in the President, not at all in Congress. He thought there could be no doubt of the right to pardon before conviction as well as after.

Mr. Howe said he was glad to find the question in the Garland case did not go so far as Mr. Doolittle thought it did. The question, he said, was not whether the President could pardon a man for an offence, but whether he could time pardon all men for all offences—a very important question.

Mr. Doolittle said that he had been mistaken in saying the Garland case was pardoned under a general amnesty without being named, but he held the decision in that case to be that the power of the President to pardon and grant respites, except in the case of impeachment, is unlimited.

The question was then taken upon the resolution and it was adopted.

A NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. Wilson introduced a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency, secured by pledge of public stocks, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Section one provides that the Comptroller of the Currency shall receive and hold in custody, without charge, for a period of not more than ninety days to be by him specified, and such report shall be made within five days after the expiration of the specified time, with a penalty of $100 for every day's delay of such report. After the said five days, duplicate of such report shall be published by the Comptroller in a newspaper in the City of Philadelphia, and in a newspaper in the place where the Association is established, or in the nearest place where a newspaper is published, in the opinion of the Association making said report. Each Association is required to report to the Comptroller on the first Tuesday of each month, the condition of its affairs, including the preceding day, and statements shall include a report of loans and discounts, specie deposits, and circulation.

Mr. Pomeroy introduced a bill to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship lines between the United States and Mexico, which was referred to the Committee of Post Offices and Roads.

It authorizes the Postmaster-General to make contracts, to continue not exceeding ten years, for the transportation of all mailable matter between New-York and Sisal and Vera Cruz, Mexico, by such responsible parties possessing ample ability to furnish the necessary steamships, provided that he requires the department of a mail steamship from New-York at least once in three weeks, and that the compensation for such service shall not exceed $5,000 per round trip. In case of failure to perform regular voyages, a pro rata deduction is to be made from the compensation, and fines and penalties may also be imposed for delays and irregularities in the performance of service according to contract.

GEORGIA RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. Stewart introduced a bill to enable the people of Georgia to form a State Government, republican in form, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

It provides for the repealing of so much of the act of June 25, 1868, as relates to Georgia, and making the Government of Georgia provisional only, and subject to the act of March 2, 1867. All civil, only, and subject to the act of March 2, 1867. All civil only, and subject the seventh proposed Constitution of said State, who are not disfranchised by the Fourteenth Amendment, or by the Reconstruction Acts of Congress, except members of the Legislature, shall continue in office until the State be fully restored in all its relations to the Union, and the Convention, elected under the laws of Congress to form a State Constitution, as are not disfranchised, shall assemble on the 1st Monday in December next, with full power to alter or amend said Constitution, provided the same conflict with the laws of Congress and the Constitution. Said State Constitution, so amended, shall be submitted to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection, as may appoint; and on satisfaction or rejection of said amended Constitution, such persons and no others shall vote as shall have the qualifications of said Constitution, provided that no person shall be excluded from voting on account of race or color. When said amended Constitution shall have been submitted by a majority of the electors, it may be submitted for the consideration of Congress.

PUNISHMENT OF CRIMES.

Mr. Sumner introduced a bill providing that accessories to a violation of the fifty-fifth section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be punished as the principal of the association.

Also a bill declaring that the words "trial at common law" in the first section of act of July, 1868, relating to the competency of witnesses, shall be held to include criminal trials and proceedings; also a joint resolution to repeal the act of Congress with hard labor in cases where the law merely provides for imprisonment; also a bill to regulate prosecutions under the laws of the United States for embezzling and kindred offences, making a general allegation of embezzlement, &c., sufficient in the indictment and making no restriction as to the amount embezzled; also a bill to repeal the act of Feb. 18, 1868, prohibiting the importation of persons from foreign countries, all of which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Sumner also introduced a bill to provide for the execution, in the District of Columbia, of commissions issued by the Courts of the States and Territories and of foreign nations and for taking depositions to be used in such Courts. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Also a bill to provide for the punishment of accessories in criminal offences against the United States. Referred to the Committee of the Judiciary.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. Howe called up the bill for the relief of Mrs. Murphy, of Decatur, Ala.

Messrs. Fessenden and Howard read arguments against allowing the claim, taking the general ground that the Government was not bound to indemnify persons for losses inflicted by the war.

Mr. Howe advocated the claim upon the ground that even if the Government were not obliged to pay the losses inflicted by the army, it certainly was obliged to pay for property of loyal citizens taken and used by itself.

Mr. Conkling made an argument against paying the claim.

Without voting upon the bill the Senate, at 3:45, went into Executive Session, after which it went upon session was held, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker announced that the veto having expired, the House resumed its session.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1870.

Mr. Bingham gave a brief exposition of votes, historical and explanatory of Condition work. When the Pensions bill comes up in Committee Mr. Washburne will produce its consideration by a brief speech upon the financial condition of the Government. He will present a comprehensive balance sheet of the receipts and expenditures for the past two years, and of the estimates for the next fiscal year, and he will endeavor to impress upon Congress the necessity of cutting down expenses everywhere, and of reducing the civil service in every branch, in order to enable the new administration to begin its career with a prospect of success.

STEAMSHIP LINE TO MEXICO.

A bill was introduced in the Senate to-day by Senator Pomeroy, providing for the establishment of a steam mail service between New-York and Sisal and Vera Cruz, Mexico, to sail at least once a week, with a subsidy of $5,000 for the round trip.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The abuse of the franking privilege was the subject of a considerable debate in the House to-day. Messrs. Lynch, Gary and Baldwin made personal

EXTENSIVE ROBBERY.

Two Cash Boxes Containing $150,000 Worth of Bonds and Securities Stolen from a Safe—No Clue to the Thieves.

Wall-street seems to be the constant prey of the more daring and skillful class of thieves in this City, and despite the care exercised by a portion of those doing business in that managed thoroughfare, they seem to be plundered as easily and deftly as those careless ones who throw valuable bonds and securities on counters and desks ready to the hand of the first adroit thief who happens to catch a glimpse of the treasure. Once in a while the "bond robbers" stray into Exchange-place or Pine-street, as occurred on Saturday last, (the details of the robbery of that day have already appeared in our columns.) We have now another startling robbery to announce, and, as usual in such cases, the depredators made good their escape, leaving no trace to their whereabouts or identity.

It appears that on Thursday last, or New-Year's Eve, two large iron cash boxes were placed in an iron safe in the inner office of Messrs. CAMMANN & PYNE, lawyers and attorneys, doing business at No. 14 Wall-street. These boxes were owned by the individual members of the firm, and each contained a large amount in bonds and other securities. The box owned by Mr. CAMMANN contained sixty-one United States bonds, valued at $59,500; one New-York State bond for $5,000; one certificate of 100 shares in the Bowery Fire Insurance Company, valued at $3,500; 119 shares of the Hudson River Railroad, valued at $11,900; and one New-York County bond for $11,500, and $29,000 worth of stock certificates and securities. The box owned by Mr. PYNE contained thirty-five United States bonds, for $19,500; five Central Pacific Railroad bonds, for $5,000; two Union Pacific Railroad bonds, for $2,000; three California Pacific Railroad bonds, for $3,000; two Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad bonds, for $3,000, and three Cohoes bonds for $3,000; besides a certificate of fifty shares of the Hope Fire Insurance Company, one certificate of sixty-five shares in New-York and Philadelphia Petroleum Company, one certificate of fourteen shares of Western Union Telegraph Company, one certificate of twenty shares of Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad.

These boxes and their contents, valued at over $150,000, were placed as usual in the large iron safe of the firm, on Thursday evening, as already stated. When the safe containing the boxes was locked, the key was deposited, agreeably to previous custom, in another and neighboring safe, which was securely locked and the key carried away by one of the firm. Friday being New-Year's Day, no one connected with the office of CAMMANN & PYNE came to the premises, and it was not until Saturday morning that any of the employes went near the safe. Their attention was, however, immediately attracted to it in consequence of the door to the safe being discovered standing wide open. Further examination resulted in the discovery that both of the bond boxes had been removed. As the outer and inner doors to the office, and the door to the second safe containing the keys to the safe robbed, were all found intact and fastened, the inference is that the gang of thieves who perpetrated this daring robbery must have had in their possession themselves of duplicate keys to all the doors and safes. Judging from past experience in such larcenies and burglaries the Police are led to believe that the thieves must have had frequent and unmolested possession of the premises in order to perfect their skeleton keys, and as there are at present several well-known operators in this peculiar and flourishing line of business now in the City, the probability is that some of them are implicated in the present bond robbery.

The Gerpolled firm advertised their loss in yesterday's Times, and full details regarding the bonds and securities thus stolen will be found therein. The Police authorities have been notified of the fact, and Detective POSTNER is now making what investigation he can in the matter. As a reward of $3,000 has been offered for the return of the boxes and their contents, "and no questions asked," the probability is that the case will fever reach a Police Magistrate.

Hudson Highland Suspension Bridge.

Work will be speedily commenced under the terms of a contract just concluded for the suspension of a bridge across the Hudson River between "Anthony's Nose," on the line between the Counties of Westchester and Putnam on the East, and Fort Clinton on the West of the Hudson, about forty-three miles from the City of New-York. This point is by far the most romantic on the river, and is far-famed as one in point of grandeur unsurpassed in America, and consequently is well known to the traveling public. The shore on the Fort Clinton side is composed of solid granite, and rises almost perpendicularly from 150 to 160 feet. The same can be said of the Nose, or opposite shore, except that the elevation is much greater, but being a sharp promontory as its name indicates, approaches to the bridge are feasible, both for railroad and highway purposes. The elevation of the bridge is to be 150 feet above highwater, and about on a level with the Western Bank. Therefore, it will be readily perceived that the wonderful granite anchorage facilities offered guarantee, with proper construction, the safest and most durable structure of its kind in the world. At this point was stretched across the river an iron cable to obtain a clear idea of the Revolution, for the purpose of obstructing the passage up of the vessels of the enemy.

Immediately to the north of Fort Clinton, the western terminus of the bridge, is the mouth of Popolopen Creek, separating Forts Clinton and Montgomery, which creek has its source several miles to the westward among the Highlands of Orange and Rockland counties in the direction of Turner's, on the line of the New-York and Erie Railway, which is distant only about 11 miles. This actual survey a very desirable route for a railroad has been found from Turner's to the western terminus, and adopted by the Erie and New-England Railroad Company, incorporated during the past Winter in anticipation of the passage of the Bridge Charter, which route is to be completed in a few days, be under contract.

From the Nose, or eastern terminus, the Erie and New-England Railroad runs in a southerly direction along the side of the declivity about two miles, where it curves to the east, running in company with the Peekskill Valley Creek for nearly two miles, and thence on to New-England. The elevation of the bridge being a little over 150 feet, it will be readily seen that connections can be made in distances of less than three miles from the western terminus with the West Shore Hudson River Railroad, now under contract, and from the eastern terminus with the Hudson River Railroad, both north and south, at grades of less than fifty feet to the mile.

The following will show the estimated dimensions, strength and cost of the bridge:

Clear span, 1,600 feet; length of bridge between the towers, 1,955 feet; total length of bridge, including approaches, 3,440 feet; height of bridge above high water, 150 feet; length of broad and narrow gauge for railroads; highways for general travel; working safe load for the railroad lines, 2,400 tons; working safe load for the highways, 2,800 tons; total safe load for the bridge, 5,200 tons; load that would break the bridge, 26,171 tons; the bridge will carry at one time 32 passenger cars; the bridge would carry safely 34,500 people, and at a train of 40 locomotives, if they could all be on it at once. Fifty-three locomotives and 16,000 people would fill it. There are to be 20 cables in 4 systems. Each cable will be about 14 inches in diameter. The cables will contain 871,796,750 feet steel wire, or about 70,000 miles of it, and 1,000,000 weight of iron and steel in the bridge, 17,005 tons. Total amount of masonry, 65,054 cubic yards. Total suspended weight, 9,051 tons. Height of towers above water, 290 feet. The bridge will leave the water-way of the river unobstructed. Cost from $3,500,000 to $4,000,000.

The route of the Erie and New-England Railroad, from Turner's to Newburgh, in the vicinity of connections on the bridge, lessens the distance from the Erie Railway to Boston, compared with any existing or proposed route, from twenty-five to thirty-five miles.

The site was selected by the following Board of Engineers: Major-Gen. HOMAS ALLEN, Reg., President Novelty Iron Works; Major-Gen. GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN; Major-Gen. H. G. WRIGHT, United States Engineers; Major-Gen. Q. A. GILLMORE, United States Engineers; Major-Gen. H. W. BENHAM, United States Engineers; Hon. WM. J. MCALPINE, late State Engineer, &c.; Gen. CHARLES P. STEWART, Chief Engineer Water-Cure Hydro; Hudson River Railroad; DELAVAN S. BARNES, Chief Engineer Dutchess and Columbia Railroad; Col. JULIUS W. ADAMS, Engineer Croton; Col. M. O. DAVIDSON, Chief Engineer of New-England and Erie Railroad; Gen. E. W. SERRELL, Chief Engineer of Erie and New-England Railroad; Gen. LORENZO L. WHITE, late Chief Surveyor of New-Jersey.

Order of Superintendent Kennedy Relative to the Change of Duty in the Police Department.

Superintendent KENNEDY yesterday made the following announcement to the Captains of Police:

"General Order No. 548 is amended so as to read as follows; and you will be governed thereby:

GENERAL ORDER NO. 548.—You will on the 15th of November, inst., (meaning Nov. 15, 1868,) change the hours of patrol duty as follows, viz.: Day duty will commence at 7 o'clock A. M., and end at 7 o'clock P. M. Evening duty will be from 5 to 7 o'clock P. M. Night duty will commence at 1 o'clock P. M., and end at 7 o'clock A. M.

Day Duty.—First tour, from 7 o'clock A. M. to 9 o'clock A. M.; second tour, from 9 o'clock A. M. to 1 o'clock P. M.; third tour, from 1 o'clock P. M. to 5 o'clock P. M.

Evening Duty.—From 5 o'clock P. M. to 1 o'clock P. M.

Night Duty.—First tour, from 1 o'clock P. M. to 11 o'clock P. M.; second tour, from 11 o'clock P. M. to 3 o'clock A. M.; third tour, from 3 o'clock A. M. to 7 o'clock A. M.

Captains of Police may (if the ability of their command to meet a sudden emergency will not be impaired thereby) allow the members of one section (in turn) of the platoon that performed the second tour of night patrol duty, to go to their respective homes, and remain until it is their turn to report at the Station House, at 9 o'clock A. M. When they will relieve the other section on duty, and patrol the Precinct until 1 o'clock P. M. The section relieved at 9 o'clock A. M. will, with the exception of one hour for breakfast and one hour for dinner, remain in the Station-house, as a reserved force, until 1 o'clock P. M., when they will relieve the section on patrol, and perform the patrol duty of the Precinct until 5 o'clock P. M. The section relieved at 1 o'clock P. M. will, with the exception of one hour for dinner, remain in the Station-house, as a reserve force, until 5 o'clock P. M., when the platoon on day duty will be relieved by the other platoon.

Captains of Police may (if the requirements of the public service will permit) allow the men on the platoon that performed the first and third tours of night patrol duty, to go to their respective homes, and remain (unless their services should be meantime required) until 5 o'clock P. M., when they will report for duty. The platoon whose duty it may be to relieve at 11 o'clock P. M. or at 3 o'clock A. M., and the section who are to perform the first tour of day patrol duty will, without any exception, remain in the Station-house during the period they are in reserve, unless their services should be required at fires, riots, or for other public emergencies. The evening and night patrol duty will be performed by the platoons, in turn. One section at a time, of the platoon that performed day duty, will be allowed fifty minutes for supper, while in reserve during the evening tour. The members of the platoon performing patrol duty from 7 to 9 o'clock A. M. will not convey prisoners arrested by them during the evening or night tours to court, until after being relieved at 9 o'clock A. M.

This general order to remain in force until the 15th of March next, when it will be suspended, and General Order No. 537 will go into force, unless otherwise ordered."

BILLIARDS.

McDevitt's $5,000 Challenge and Dion's Response—Matches Between Foster, Deery and Benjamin.

The telegraph yesterday announced from Chicago that JOHN MCDEVITT, of that city, had "challenged any player in the world to compete for the golden cue and $5,000 a side Balkline game, 1,500 or 2,000 points up." The telegram is correct in part only, and relates but about one-half of a story now more than a week old. First of all, MCDEVITT did not propose to play for the golden cue, and, by his resignation of the office of Champion, and PERLAT & COLLENDER's presentation to him of the emblem of championship, the golden cue is no longer a subject for competition. MCDEVITT in reality offered to play the pool game for $5,000, but added a condition that was calculated to act as a bar to any match, viz., that the contest should take place in Chicago. This very important proviso the telegraph fails to mention; nor does it mention the fact, known in Chicago before the telegram was sent, that on Wednesday of last week JOSEPH DION made a counter but seemingly fair proposition, viz., to play three pool games of 1,500 or 2,000 points—one in Chicago, one in Montreal, and the other in this City, each for $1,000 or $2,500 a side. DION is willing to play MCDEVITT, but not in Chicago alone; and it is well known that MELVIN FOSTER is anxious to play MCDEVITT anywhere east of Chicago, a challenge to this effect from FOSTER to MCDEVITT having awaited the latter's acceptance ever since the 20th of June last. DION and FOSTER are the only players likely to be pitted against MCDEVITT for an important stake, and it is a mere waste of words to ask either to play in Chicago. Furthermore, those who issue challenges like this of MCDEVITT's, as well as those who circulate them, are well aware that they will not be accepted, and consequently that there will be no match.

On Monday morning FOSTER began to practice for his forthcoming return match with DION, which is to consist of 11,000 points, American pool, pushes prohibited, the stake being $1,000 aside. The match, which is to take place in Montreal on or about the 27th inst., is play or pay, the entire $4,000 having been put up five days prior to the contest last week at the Academy of Music. The following score was made by FOSTER against DION on Monday night, which will give an idea as to how well he is now playing the pool-barred game:

FOSTER.—8, 4, 2, 5, 23, 0, 0, 2, 4, 0, 40, 20, 0, 17, 52, 122, 2, 29, 72, 0, 72, 20, 23, 12, 20, 0, 11, 6, 5, 9, 2, 14, 0, 0, 23, 0, 68, 40, 32, 45, 0, 24, 6, 177, 0, 0, 0. Total, 1,159; average, 34.

DION.—3, 8, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 10, 60, 3, 0, 23, 12, 2, 77, 27, 19, 14, 20, 2, 12, 27, 41, 32, 0, 2, 11, 23, 62, 0, 54, 114, 0, 15, 0, 32, 15, 0, 46, 30, 17, 0, 75, 92, 20, 10, 40, 16, 0, 52, 100. Total, 1,209; average, 27.

This afternoon at 3 o'clock the match at French carons, 300 points up, for $500, between FOSTER and BAXTER BENJAMIN, will begin at Nos. 14 and 16 Broadway-avenue. Foster agrees to give his opponent 150 points, or one-half the game, and in addition gives the odds in money of 100 to 80.

The Condition of the Streets.

From the Battery to Central Park, Broadway was yesterday, a sea of slush of unknown depth, which it was impossible to cross except at a few points. Through this slough of nastiness vehicles rolled and splashed and engaged, spattering the combined filth of many days' accumulation on the sidewalks, the pedestrians and the store fronts, until so far as color was concerned, it was difficult to distinguish one from the other.

At the corner of Broadway and Chambers-street, a solitary sweeper, broome in hand, was struggling with the sea of slush that threatened to overwhelm him. At the corner of Prince-street and Broadway quite a large gang of men were at work opening culverts and cleaning off the crosswalks, and above this point other gangs were performing similar operations. On applying at the office of the contractor for cleaning the streets, our reporter was informed that a gang of from sixty to seventy men had been kept at work on Broadway since the last snow fall, but that it was utterly impossible to keep the crosswalks clear, as the traffic passing through Broadway drew the snow on again as fast as it was thrown off. Between the City Hall Park and Fourteenth-street the walks leading across streets running at right angles to Broadway were tolerably free from snow and slush, with two exceptions—those at Chambers and Canal streets. At the latter crossing the slush was at least six inches deep; but it is only right to say that the immense amount of traffic at this point renders it almost impossible to keep the crossing clean. The street-cleaning contractor considers that one of the great difficulties he has to contend in keeping Broadway in a passable condition is the absence of culverts. Between Canal and Chambers streets there are but six culverts, and the consequence is that water cannot flow off from that portion of Broadway.

Another difficulty is the practice of the Railroad Companies of throwing the snow from their tracks into the gutters, and thus stopping them up entirely. Were this forbidden, and the old ordinance compelling persons to keep the gutters in front of their dwellings and places of business open enforced, most of our streets would present a very different appearance to what they did yesterday.

A few cart-loads of snow have been carried away by the Street-cleaning Contractor from points where it accumulated so as to offer great impediments to traffic, and from Park-row and the lower end of the park, the Railroad Companies have cleared off a number of loads. It may be supposed that these wealthy corporations might well afford to clear the snow from the entire extent of their tracks, as the law compels them to do in Paris and other European cities. It would appear, however, that if either been it up, hostile their tracks, or throw it in the gutters, in either case obstructing traffic and the flow of water down the gutter.

Annual Report of the Croton Aqueduct Department.

From the report of this Department for the past year, we take the following figures:

Received from water rents and penalties	$1,229,404 95
Received from taps in water-pipes	9,345 50
Received from sewer connections	32,791 00
Received from vault constructions	45,726 00
Petty cash	1,579 45
Total	$1,319,844 90

The receipts in 1867, from water rents, were $55,676 95 less than in 1866. As compared with 1861, the receipts of 1868 are $486,459 50 greater.

Contracts for new stone block pavements to the amount of 46,982 superficial yards, were awarded in the year. The total length of stone block pavements completed and under contract is 51 miles, 1,522 feet. The quantity of Nicolson pavement laid during the year was 20,072 superficial yards.

In One Hundred and Twenty-fourth-street, between First and Third-avenues, a composition pavement called the "Fisk concrete" has been laid. It has not been down long enough to enable the Board to decide on its merits, and the same remark applies to the Stafford pavement.

Of 8-inch water pipes there have been laid 21,440 feet; of 12-inch, 8,968 feet; of 20-inch, 2,631—in all 2 miles 573 feet. There are now in the City a total length of main water pipes of 212 miles 3,045 feet.

The number of buildings used either as dwellings or for business purposes within the area of water distribution is 66,926, the number of manufactories 1,617, of churches 307. The number of buildings supplied with water free of charge is 266, as follows: Fire Department buildings, 61; Police, 52; Charities and Corrections, 55; Board of Education, 113; Markets, 10; City Hall Park, 6. The Central Park Commissioners and the street-cleaning contractor also receive a supply of water free of charge.

Brooklyn Board of Education.

A regular meeting of the Board was held last evening, the President, Dr. J. S. THOMAS, in the chair. The principal business was in relation to the subject of free books, and the report of the Special Committee in regard to the matter was submitted. The report sets forth that there have been distributed to the several schools books to the amount of $32,000, and that there remains now on hand applicable to the further distribution of free books the sum of $3,000; that also the rules under which these books were distributed were probably from want of experience on the part of the Committee, not sufficiently stringent, which was made self-evident from the fact that over $8,000 were spent for teachers, thus giving to such schools a book, whereas the sum for two scholars, which course would have resulted in the saving of $4,000 in readers alone. No provision having been made by the Board for continuing during the ensuing year the distribution of books under the system inaugurated in 1867, the Committee do not seem themselves justified in recommending the incurring an expense for which moneys have not been legally raised in the annual budget. The report was adopted, and the Committee discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The Committee on the subject of furnishing more school accommodations for colored children, reported in favor of hiring rooms in the neighborhood of High and Jay streets for a primary school. The rooms could be hired for $350 a year, and a teacher can be procured for a like sum. The report was adopted, and the Board soon after adjourned.

The Scotland Steamer Explosion.

An account of the unfortunate killing of four men and the wounding of several others, engaged on Sunday last in blowing up the wreck of the steamer Scotland, has already appeared in the TIMES. The Scotland was the largest iron steamer afloat except the Great Eastern. Her capacity was 3,988 tons, her length 400 feet, depth 38 feet, beam 44 feet, and draught of water 24 feet aft, and 18 feet forward. She was built in 1865, and soon after struck upon a bar at Fire Island. She was extricated from this, but in a leaky condition, and, while steaming to this City, sunk in the south channel of New-York Bay. The depth of water in which the vessel sank varied from twenty to thirty feet, and consequently the entire top of the hull remained above water. Last October a contract was awarded by the Government to the Reputable Submarine Telegraph Company, for the blowing up of the vast mass of iron. A specified sum was to be paid for the removal of the vessel, to the depth of twenty-two feet below the surface, and in addition the Company were to receive all the valuable English wrought iron which could be hoisted from the interior after the useless explosions. They have worked diligently. Every part of the ship is at least eighteen feet below the surface, and much of it has been blown away to the depth of twenty-four feet. Though the Company will soon have performed their contract to reduce the entire wreck to a depth of twenty-two feet, they will continue operations for perhaps a year longer, with the view of raising all the iron possible. Operations commenced on Tuesday last, by the placing of a charge of 250 pounds of powder blew away half the length of one side of the vessel in varying angles. Capt. CHURCHILL, one of those who perished on Sunday, was exceedingly well acquainted with the business of submarine blasting, and was employed by the Government, in connection with operations, on the Hudson River. Immediately before his death, GEORGE MOORE, one of the men in the boat, remarked to him: "Supposing that torpedo should blow me up?" His reply was, "Don't trouble yourself. You won't know anything about it if it does." A few minutes after, both questioner and questioned were scattered in the waters in the minutest fragments. The two others killed were JAMES OREM and LOUIS IRONS. Capt. CHURCHILL leaves a wife at the Belmont Hotel, in Fulton-street. IRONS was also married. The other two were single. STRAHN, the driver, who was providentially saved, had been a gunner on the Monitor during her fight with the Merrimac.

Workingwomen's Home—Card from the Board of Trustees.

We desire to state that no change is contemplated in the character or management of the Workingwomen's Home. Certain unauthorized statements have been made which may have the effect of impairing its usefulness. The following extract from the Monthly Record for January is the best answer to the articles alluded to:

"The effort to provide a comfortable, economical and respectable residence for the workingwomen of this City, is still successfully prosecuted. The trustees have found it desirable to separate its management from that of the House of Industry, and Mr. HALLIDAY has accordingly relinquished to Mr. PYNE the entire supervision of the enterprise. As the inmates of the Home desire that all unnecessary notoriety should be avoided, the trustees have deemed it best to discontinue the monthly notices of it which used to appear in the Record, but feel thankful to be able to say that it is surely overcoming the most formidable obstacles to a new and untried work, and they confidently expect that it will soon be filled to its entire capacity by a respectable, industrious and well-satisfied class of female boarders."

Archibald Russell, Charles Eno, Marshall Lefferts, Hugh N. Camp, Frederick G. Foster, Morris K. Jesup, E. Delafield, D. Lydig Suydam, George F. Betts, Trustees.

Primary Election.

The following is a corrected list of officers and Committees elected by the Eighth Assembly District Union Republican Association, on Tuesday, the 29th ult.:

President, John O'Brien; First Vice-President, Chas. W. Terry; Second Vice-President, Henry C. Kennedy; Recording Secretary, John Moriarty; Corresponding Secretary, William Waters; Treasurer, John Lewis; Sergeant-at-Arms, John Morris.

General Committee.—James A. Lucas, William H. Palmer, Matthew Davis, John P. Jorstemon, Samuel Cook, Michael Neville, Theodore Buss, George E. Davis, Adam M. Kelly, Oliver Carter.

Executive Committee.—Wm. A. Macdonough, Geo. Larcott, John McCabe, Robert Hancock, Joseph Buxtman, Wm. J. McAlister, Henry Eippel, John Meighan, John C. Vreeland, Wm. Umversaght, John Walsh, Bart. McDonald, Samuel Hutchinson, Adam Sanabs, Dey Fuellis, George W. Kirk, Benj. F. Schaffer, Edward Sherhard, Hugh E. Sherhard, George W. Wilt, Sigmond Lang, Edwin G. Martin, Adam Senger, Jeremiah O'Donohue, William Watelman, Alexander Smith, Daniel Brady, Jacob Laut, John Hayward, Hugh Bennett, Stephen H. Shourds, Barton J. Chatfield, Albert Crowley, B. J. O'Connell, Frederick Engel, J. C. Macdonough, John F. Bust, John Lee, V. William Wesler, E. J. Walsh, William Weeks, Christopher Hollywood.

Attendance Upon the Public Schools.

The following table shows the average attendance of pupils and the whole number taught in the schools under the control of the Board of Education of this City for the year 1868, as appears from the sworn returns of the Principals, and filed in the office of the Clerk of the Board:

Schools.	Aver. Attend.	Whole Num. Tau't.	Total Aver. Attend.	Total Whole Num. Tau't.
Grammar Schools, Boys' Department	16,221	22,469
Grammar Schools, Girls' Department	14,199	20,499	30,320	42,968
Primary Departments	22,069	31,701
Primary Schools	17,252	43,797	39,696	75,498
Total Grammar and Primary Schools			69,416	118,466
Colored Schools			600	1,067
Evg. Schools—Males	4,420	14,228
Evg. Schools—Females	2,422	4,268	6,842	18,496
Normal Schools			800	1,207
Corporate Schools			6,888	16,898
Grand total			103,136	207,432

POLICE COURTS.

JEFFERSON MARKET—DODGE, JUSTICE.

SINGULAR ARSON CASE.

No. 435 West Thirty-ninth-street is a five-story tenement-house, having four families on each floor. Sunday night a fire broke out in this huge human hive, in the apartments of SAMUEL WHITEROOM, on the fourth floor, but the flames were quickly extinguished, and before any injury to life, which was far more imminent than destruction to property, had been done. Fire-Marshal BRESNAN having instituted an examination into the origin of the fire, soon found cause to forward Samuel WHITEROOM, who was arrested by the Twentieth-Precinct Police, and finally the Marshal obtained a full confession from the prisoner. From this document it appears that WHITEROOM, on Sunday, was very drunk and quarrelled with his wife, and that she taking the children with her, left the apartment. He then repented, and sought to induce his wife to return home, and slept for some time. During the night he got up and went to the adjoining room to get some clothes, and finding a barrel filled with soiled linen on the top of his trunk, he upset and broke it. He also spilled out some papers which he says he saw were some old letters of his kept by his wife. Stooping down to gather them struck a match and kindled it to the heap of paper and linen. Further he does not remember, as he was dragged out of the burning room almost suffocated. He adhered to this story before the Magistrate, and was committed without bail for trial at the General Sessions.

BOY BURGLARS.

LEWIS FITZGERALD and JAMES SHIEL, boys fourteen and sixteen years of age respectively, were accused of having committed a burglary upon the dwelling-house of THOMAS D. STEWART, No. 156 West Twenty-first-street. It is stated that they had effected an entrance through the frame basement door, and were detected by one of the inmates about 1 o'clock in the morning leaving the house with property valued at $200. Two pistol shots fired at them brought to the spot Officers HAGG and WOOD of the Twenty-second Precinct, who arrested the boys and recovered the property. The culprits pleaded guilty, and were committed for trial at the General Sessions.

ESSEX MARKET—SHANDLEY, JUSTICE.

DISHONEST SERVANT.

AMELIA BERRY, of No. 238 West Forty-first-street, made an affidavit that on the 26th of December she had KATE CAMPIE in her employ as a servant, and that she missed a silk dress, coat, shawl, flannel, handkerchief, belt and buckle, all valued at $75. The girl being suspected, was arrested and the cotton, belt and buckle found in her possession. She pleaded guilty to having stolen the dress and flannel, and was committed for trial at the General Sessions.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

THE ROGERS'S MURDER CASE.—An inquest was commenced yesterday by Coroner PERRY, at the Coroners' office, in the case of Mr. CHARLES M. ROGERS, whose brutal and unprovoked murder has already received comment in these columns. The testimony of the negro boy, who placed the two unknown men just before the assault upon Mr. ROGERS was made, was taken by the Coroner, as well as some other evidence of an important character. As the Police had satisfied the Coroner they would be successful in looking an arrest of John Hight man, if given proper time, he concluded to adjourn the inquest until the 15th inst. The representatives of the Press were requested to omit publication of the evidence taken by the Coroner yesterday, and the request was cheerfully complied with, as by so doing this reticence may help to lead to the discovery of the murderers. Capt. CAPRAVO stated that he felt confident of success in the matter, and it is to be sincerely hoped that he will be successful.

ELECTROCUTE—LECTURE BY PROF. DOREMUS.—Last evening Prof. DOREMUS delivered a lecture on "Electricity," at the College of New-York, before a crowded audience. After giving a number of beautiful experiments, the Professor displayed the magnetism, galvanic and electro-magnetic lights. "Why," he asked, "with the power to produce the powerful and beautiful lights, prevailing the sun in brilliancy, do we still continue to use the ordinary gas and even oil lights?" He trusted that the time was not far distant when the practical man and the man of science would shake hands, and the discoveries of science be utilized. In this respect, he said, we are far behind European nations. The Professor stated, however, that the magnesium light is about to be introduced here on a large scale, a company having been formed for the purpose. The lecture concluded by a brilliant display of what may be called electric pyrotechnics.

A RAILROAD MYSTERY.—Mention has already been made in the TIMES that on New-Year's morning the mangled remains of an unknown man had been found on the up track of the Hudson River Railroad, near Fifty-sixth-street. The body was taken to the Morgue, and was yesterday identified as that of HUGH RYAN, aged 35, who resided, while alive, in Thirty-eighth-street. The relatives of the deceased admitted that RYAN had been intoxicated for several days, and his death may have been the result of accident. Coroner SCHMITTOTT will hold an inquest to-day.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.—JOSEPH FELL, a native of France, attempted to destroy his own life at an early hour yesterday morning, in front of his residence, No. 3 Grandstreet, by deliberately shooting himself in the mouth with a pistol. Officer O'TIERNEY, of the Twenty-eighth Precinct, who was on post near by at the time, heard the pistol-shot, and ran and took the weapon from FELL before he could do himself any further injury. Dr. SEBRING was called, and pronounced the wound not of a dangerous character.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF LONDON LIFE.—JOHN B. GOUGH will deliver the above-named lecture for the first time this season, at the Cooper Institute, to-night. This lecture is for the benefit of the Home for Old Persons of Both Sexes, which is supported by volunteer contributions, and contains now about eighty inmates. For the sake of this worthy charity, we hope there will be a full house.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Mr. MAURICE NAHIL, of No. 69 Mulberry-street, who was knocked down and run over at the corner of Twenty-sixth-street and Third-avenue, on Monday, died yesterday at Bellevue Hospital. The remains were subsequently removed to the late residence of the deceased, where Coroner SCHIMMELPFENNIG will hold an inquest to-day.

CITY CHAMBERLAIN'S OFFICE.—The City Chamberlain yesterday deposited in the Broadway Bank, to the credit of the City, $3,465 72, being the interest on public moneys received by him for the month of December, 1868, making a total of $107,526 31 deposited by him to that account during the past year.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

THIEVES SENT TO THE PENITENTIARY.—WM. SMITH, WM. SHANAHAN and FRANK SHANAHAN, who were arrested by Officer REED, of the Forty-sixth Precinct, for stealing twenty-six and a quarter yards of cassimere cloth from ULLMAN'S dry-goods store, corner of Seventh-street and Montrose-avenue, on the 29th ult., were taken before Justice RAMSE on Monday. Mr. ULLMAN identified the goods, which were obtained from the pawnbroker with whom they had been pledged by the thieves, and the Justice sent the trio to the Penitentiary for four months.

GRACE CHURCH ROBBED.—On Monday night Grace Church, in Conselyea-street, near Lorimer, E. D., was entered by thieves, who carried off forty yards of carpet of the value of $450. Wm. E. HOYT was arrested on suspicion of having something to do with the theft, and Justice RAMSE held him for examination. It appears that some time since a portion of the communion plate of the same church was stolen, and that HOYT confessed to have had a hand in the sacrilegious operation.

PASSING COUNTERFEITS.—LOUIS REIS was arrested by Officer BRADDON yesterday on complaint of G. HAUSMEYER, baker, at the corner of Smith and Bogg streets, E. D., to whom it appears the accused offered a counterfeit United States note in payment for some cake; it appears also that he had attempted to pass the bill at some other stores. He was taken before United States Commissioner JONES, and held for examination.

BURNED TO DEATH.—SARAH DOHR, 50 years of age, who was employed in the rope-walk at the corner of Flushing and Graham avenues, having some tow about her waist, went into the boiler-room on same day, where the tow caught fire and burned her severely. She was taken to the City Hospital, and died on Sunday. Coroner SCHMITTOTT held an inquest, and a verdict of accidental burning was rendered.

DISTURBING PUBLIC WORSHIP.—DAWSON WOOD and ALBERT VERTER, young men, pleaded guilty before Justice CONSTABLE, yesterday, of having repeatedly disturbed the services in the Mission Chapel, on the corner of Atlantic and Grand avenues. The complaint was made by Officer CHARLES MOORE. At the request of the officers of the church, the prisoners were reprimanded and discharged.

GOLDEN WEDDING.—On Monday evening the Golden Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. ROBERT M. WHITING was celebrated at their residence in Cumberland-street. On Wednesday evening the Golden Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. LEMUEL LOFKIN, of Sweet Hollow, L. I., was duly celebrated.

BROOKLYN DISPENSARY.—During the year 1868 there were treated in the Brooklyn Dispensary 3,449 patients, and 12,633 prescriptions were gratuitously dispensed. Of the patients, 2,295 were natives of the United States, and 3,363 of Ireland.

SUDDEN DEATH AT THE NAVY-YARD.—DAVID HUTCHINGS, an employe at the Navy-yard, fell dead at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, just after he had started work.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.—The amount received in contributions by the Treasurer of the Brooklyn Children's Aid Society since June 8, 1868, to Jan. 4, 1869, was $2,899 76.

LECTURES BY DR. BOSWORTH.—Dr. BOSWORTH has been engaged to deliver a course of lectures at the Athenæum, in Atlantic-street, which will soon be commenced.

CONVICTED OF GRAND LARCENY.—THOS. JOHNSON was convicted in the Court of Sessions yesterday of having robbed THOMAS TRALLEY of a $90 bill, and was remanded for sentence.

NEW-JERSEY.

ALMOST A SUICIDE.—At a late hour on Monday evening several residents in the vicinity of the house of Officer RICHARDS, of the Hoboken Police, which is situated in Garden-street, were alarmed by loud and angry cries proceeding from that locality. Upon proceeding to the house whence the noises emanated, the company, Officer RICHARDS, was found to be engaged in an angry altercation with his wife. All efforts to quiet him were unavailing, and he finally became so wild in his anger as to threaten to shoot himself. His threats were treated as the wild ravings of a severely intoxicated man by the persons who had congregated in his house, and when he attempted to put his dollar into the avowed object of putting his threat into execution, no effort was made to prevent him. Reports of pistol-shots were soon heard coming from the cellar, and the neighbors who had kindly endeavored to quiet him let no time in making a descent. Instead of discovering a bleeding and lifeless corpse, they found the enfeebled body of the policeman has been elevated upon an empty vinegar barrel, with his revolver pointing in a direction which he evidently supposed was in line with his head. The contents of three barrels of his revolver were found scattered in different parts of the cellar, the surrounding darkness, as well as his own unsteadiness, has fortunately prevented the rash policeman from burying the bullets in his head. He was disarmed and taken to the Police Station, where he remained until the fumes of his too-potent libations had evaporated. Officer RICHARDS had been charged but a short time ago with drunkenness and misconduct, and was suspended. His term of suspension had nearly expired, but he will doubtless find a new obstacle to his reinstatement in the force, in consequence of this recent mad conduct.

GERMAN IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—A proposal to introduce German teachers in the public schools of Jersey City was brought up on Monday evening at a meeting of the Board of Education, by a report from the Committee which had been appointed at the last meeting of the Board to investigate the matter. The Committee strongly recommended the appointment of teachers for the scholars of German parentage who attend the public schools, stating that 1,800 German children, between the ages of 5 and 15 years, resided in Jersey City. Mayor O'NEILL, who was present, opposed the appointment of German teachers, as the taxpayers would thereby be compelled to bear an additional burden. The report of the Committee was finally laid on the table.

HOMICIDE IN HOBOKEN—COMMITTAL OF TWO OF THE PRISONERS.—The inquest on JOHN F. FARRELL, a sailor, recently killed at a German dance in Hoboken, was resumed yesterday evening before Coroner WEBER. Further evidence adduced was merely corroborative of what has been already published in the TIMES. The jury found the following verdict: "That said JOHN FARRELL came to his death on the 26th of December, at a house in Grand-street, in the City of Hoboken; that he was struck and wounded by some blunt instrument in the hands of GUSTAVE HAUSMANN, and from said wounds he died; and we believe that ANDREW HAUSMANN is accessory to the fact." The two prisoners, brothers, were then removed in custody.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH.—A boy named JAMES GOOD, aged 12 years, was killed on the Erie Railway, near North Fourth-street, Jersey City, on Monday afternoon, while attempting to jump upon the platform of a car. He slipped between the cars by some means and was run over, receiving injuries from which he died within an hour. Coroner WEBER, who was evening, held an inquest upon his body, when a verdict was returned in accordance with the above facts.

VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY.—On Tuesday morning, Dec. 29, the body of a young man, named JOHN WARNOCK, was found quite dead in his room at his boarding-house, No. 25 Gregory-street, Jersey City. He had retired in good health on the evening preceding, and it was therefore supposed that he had committed deliberate suicide, as a bottle of laudanum was found on the table near his bed. At the inquest on his body, however, which was concluded at a late hour on Monday evening before Coroner WEBER, it was proved that the deceased was an habitual consumer of opium, and it therefore became a probability that his death resulted from an overdose taken unintentionally. A verdict was therefore rendered by the jury that the deceased came to his death by an overdose of laudanum, administered unintentionally by his own hand.

LAW REPORTS.

COURT CALENDARS FOR WEDNESDAY.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Hold by Barnard, P., Ingraham and Barnard, JJ.—Court opens at 10 A. M.

General motions continued.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Hold by Ingraham, J.—Court opens at 10 A. M.—Call of Calendar at 11 A. M.

Entered Cases.

Nos.		Nos.
6	Pope vs. Bank of Albion et al.	6	Crandall et al. vs. De Witt.
16	Miller et al. vs. Thompson et al.	6	Kinkaneki vs. Rank.
24	Osgood, &c., vs. Beach.	8	Sanger vs. Savage et al.
28	Leventritt vs. Lerner.	8	Sayer vs. Schenck.

Call No. 2—Wynkoop vs. Murray.

COMMON PLEAS—GENERAL TERM.

*Hold by

William, being taken into custody, was found in possession of several instruments of burglary. This circumstance, coupled with his entrance into the house, entitled him a resilience of six months in the Penitentiary.

A FATAL BALL ENDED.

A coat valued at $20 having been stolen from the office of the Astor House, a vain quest was made for the missing garment and the thief. Some time afterward one Thomas Kelly was found dead drunk in the street and thus fell into the hands of the Police. His person being searched he was found to have a ball ticket which had been in the pocket of the stolen coat. He was, therefore, sufficiently connected with the theft to receive a sentence of six months in the penitentiary.

OBJECT TO SPEEDS.

Mr. Beegh made a complaint against Francis Curran, that he had driven a pair of horses utterly unfit for use, being covered with sores, from One Hundred and Sixty-sixth-street to Tiffany's, in Broadway, where the arrest was made. Taking into consideration the heavy roads and the long distance the horses had been made to travel, Curran was fined $15.

KINGS COUNTY COURT.

Before Judge Troy.

The case of Joseph Dollard, which has been on trial in the County Court before Judge Troy and the Associate Justices during the last two days, was ended yesterday by a verdict of "not guilty." The prisoner was charged with burglary and grand larceny, in breaking into the store of Messrs. DANIEL DEVANEY & Co., in Williamsburg, on the night of the 21st of November last, and stealing clothing amounting in value to $3,000. The evidence offered by the prosecution established that on the afternoon of the 22d the prisoner was arrested in the City of New-York, having on his person three coats and in his possession other articles with the same marks still on, all of which were identified as being part of the goods stolen. It was further shown that before the arrest was made the prisoner was seen by the officer to throw the three vests into a cellarway. Officer Gildersleeve swore that, on the night of his bail, he saw the prisoner at about 8 o'clock on the night of the burglary in Williamsburg, in the same street where the burglary occurred. Part of the stolen goods were subsequently found in the cellar of the premises occupied by the prisoner. Mr. T. B. Odell, of New-York, opened the case for the prisoner. It was proved for the defence that the prisoner was in his own bed on the night of the burglary, and that the goods were placed in the cellar by his sister, who had become anxious at the prolonged absence of her brother on the afternoon of his arrest. That about 4 o'clock on the morning of the arrest the goods were brought to the premises by one Joseph Madden, who requested the prisoner to allow them to remain there until later in the day. It was further shown by a number of respectable witnesses that the prisoner was a young man of good character and of industrious habits.

John D. Townsend, Esq., of New-York, summed up for the prisoner, and District-Attorney Morris for the people. Both gentlemen spoke for more than an hour, and exhibited much tact and ability.

After a very clear and unbiased charge from Judge Troy, the jury retired, and after an absence of ten minutes returned with a verdict of "not guilty." This case was one of considerable interest, as the family of the prisoner are of respectable standing, and much sympathy was felt for the prisoner by many persons of position.

MONETARY AFFAIRS.

Sales at the Stock Exchange—JAN. 5, 1858.

$2,000 U. S. 6s, '81, R.	108¼	10 Ninth Nat. Bank	100
$1,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '62	99	100 Canton Co.	49
$1,000 do.	111	100 do.	49¼
$5,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '62	110⅛	100 Del. & Hud. Can.	89¾
$1,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '62	110⅛	100 West. Un. Tel.	34
$1,000 do.	110⅛	200 Quick. Min. Co.	3
$1,000 do.	110⅛	100 Marquette Pf.	15
$1,000 do.	110⅛	100 Pacific Mail	115
$1,000 U. S. 6s, 10-40 R.	100	100 do.	115¼
$5,000 U. S. 6s, Cur.	99¾	100 do.	115¼
$1,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '65	110	100 New-Un. Mail	34
$1,000 do.	110	100 N. Y. Cent.	98¼
$1,000 Tenn. 6s, new	91	50 Erie	24¾
$1,000 do.	91	100 Mich. So. & N. I.	69¾
$1,000 do.	91	100 do.	69¾
$1,000 Tenn. 6s, 1892	89	100 do.	69¾
$1,000 Virginia 6s, new	87	14 Mich. Cen.	116
$1,000 Mo. 6s, ext.	64¾	100 Clev. & Pitts.	85¾
$5,000 N. C. 6s, new	25	100 do.	85¾
$1,000 do.	25	100 Ill. Central bk. call	101
$1,000 do.	25	100 C. C. Cin. & Ind.	70¾
$1,000 do.	25	100 do.	70¾
$1,000 do. 30 call	25¾	100 Chi. & N. W.	34¾
$1,000 Mo. 6s, R. & S.	64	100 do.	34¾
N. Y. Ex.	97	200 Clev. & Tol.	110
$2,000 N. Y. Cen. 6s, '61	102¾	50 do.	110
$4,000 Hudson 1st M.	105¾	100 Mil. & Mis. L. G.	25
$2,000 Harlem 1st M.	103¾	200 Mil. & Sta. P. Pf.	67¾
$1,000 Alt. & T. H. In.	40	100 do.	67¾
$1,000 T. & W. Bonds, 1 m	19	100 Tol., W. & W.	27¾
$1,000 Ch. West. 2d M.	70	100 do.	27¾
$1,000 C. & P. 1st M. bd.	102	100 do.	27¾
$1,000 Tol. A. & V. 2d M.	60	100 Ill. Cen. s. o.	114¾
$1,000 C. & A. In. Bds.	12	100 P., Ft. W. & C.	114
$2,000 Mich. Cen. 1st M.	90	100 do.	114
$2,000 Clev. & P. 6th M.	72	200 do.	114¾
$1,000 C., C. & I.C. 1st	78	100 do.	114¾
$3,000 Long Book bds.	64	50 Morris & Essex	91
$1,000 Bank of Commerce	119¾	100 Ulster & Mid.	25
$1,000 Nat. Nat. Bank	100	100 do.	25
20 Hanover Bank	100	100 do.	25¾
5 Fourth Nat. Bank	100

SECOND BOARD—TWO P. M.

$500 U. S. 6s, '81 C.	111¼	50 Phenix Bank	104
20,000 do.	111	100 Far. Hall	117¾
2,000 do.	111	50 do.	117¾
5,000 U. S. 6s, '81, R.	108	100 Adams Ex.	93
$1,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '62	110⅛	200 West. U. T. Co.	34
$1,000 U. S. 5-20 C., '64	110⅛	100 do.	34¾
$1,000 do.	110⅛	100 do.	34¾
$1,000 do.	110⅛	100 do.	34¾
$1,000 do.

The New-York Times.

TRIPLE SHEET.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, JAN. 8, 1868.

Amusements this Evening.

PIKE'S OPERA HOUSE.
23d-st., corner 6th-av.
LA PERICHOLE. Characters by Mlle. Irma, Mlle. Rose, Mlle. Thaler, M. Arlan, M. Lodoa, Mr. Edward M. Gardner, Mr. Meachan, and others.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.
Broadway, corner 30th-st.
CAPTAIN OF THE WATCH, &c. Characters by Messrs. Lester Wallack, Gilbert, Fitzgerald, Stoddart, Rockwell, Fish, Milton, Browne, Mrs. Chas. Jeannings, Miss Annie Ward, Miss Mestayer, and others.

FRENCH THEATRE.
14th-st., near 6th-av.
GENEVIEVE DE BRABANT. Characters by Mlle. Desclauzas, Mlle. Fonteny, Mme. Rose-Bell, Messrs. Gabel, Cerpan, Bertrand, Bourgeois, and others.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.
Broadway, between Houston and Bleecker-sts.
NOBODY'S DUPLICATE. Characters by Mr. Geo. L. Fox, Mr. F. Lacy, Mr. U. K. Fox, Mlle. Lauraine, Mrs. C. Edmonds, Miss E. Harrison, Mr. F. Sinclair and others. MATINEE at 1½ o'clock.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.
Broadway, between Prince and Houston-sts.
AFTER DARK; OR, LONDON BY NIGHT. Characters by Miss Louise Moore, Miss Edith Chaplin, Messrs. Aiken, Vase, Ryan, Coleman and others.

BROADWAY THEATRE.
Broadway, near Broome-st.
THE EMERALD RING. Leading characters by Mr. and Mrs. B. Williams.

NEW-YORK THEATRE.
Broadway, near 30th-st.
FIELD OF THE CLOTH OF GOLD. Leading characters by the Misses Worrell.

BOWERY THEATRE.
Bowery, near Canal-st.
LIFE IN THE STREETS. THE AIR KING, &c. By a powerful cast.

WOOD'S MUSEUM AND THEATRE.
Broadway, corner of 30th-st.
Afternoon and evening, THE QUIET FAMILY and BERNAL. GRAND EXHIBITION OF CURIOSITIES. Open day and evening.

THE TAMMANY.
14th-st., near 3d-av.
GRAND COMBINATION OF MUSIC, PLAYS, ACROBATIC FEATS, &c.

NEW-YORK CIRCUS.
44th-st., opposite Academy of Music.
EQUESTRIAN AND GYMNASTIC PERFORMANCES AND PANTOMIMES.

BRYANTS' MINSTREL HALL.
14th-st., near 3d-av.
GENEVIEVE DE BRYANT, (Burlesque.) VOCALISTS, HUMORISTS, &c.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.
No. 585 Broadway.
BONE SQUASH DIABOLO, NEGRO COMICALITIES, &c.

COSMOPOLITAN HALL.
23d-st., near 3d-av.
GRAND CONCERT. Under the direction of Carl Anschütz.

STEINWAY HALL.
Nos. 71 and 73 East 14th-st.
LECTURES BY PROF. HOSKTORD. Subject—"Philosophy of the Opera."

COOPER INSTITUTE.
Astor-place, between 3d and 4th-sts.
LECTURE BY JOHN B. GOUGH. Subject—"Light and Shadows of London Life."

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN.
Corner 23d-st. and 4th-av.
SECOND WINTER EXHIBITION OF PICTURES.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

On page 1 will be found this morning Commissioner WELLS' able an interesting report on the industry and capital of the country; on page 2, the Ogeechee Troubles, Poison for the People, &c.; on page 3, the Proceedings of Congress and Affairs at Albany, &c.; on pages 4 and 5, Local Intelligence, Law Reports, and Commercial and Financial; on page 6, Editorials and Minor Topics; on page 7, Telegraphic, local reports, &c.; on page 10, Gov. HOFFMAN'S Message; on page 11, Realities of Irish Life, and other new publications, Anderson's Biography, Illinois letter, &c.; on pages 12, The Mississippi Levees, and miscellaneous matters.

Terms of the New-York Times.

DAILY SUBSCRIBERS.

The DAILY TIMES, per annum	$10
The DAILY TIMES (Sunday Edition included)	$12
The SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES, one year	$3
The SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES, two copies, one year	$5
The WEEKLY TIMES, one year	$2
Five copies	$8
Ten copies	$15

These prices are invariable. We have no traveling agents. Remit in Checks or Post Office Money Orders if possible. Address

H. J. RAYMOND & CO.,
TIMES Office, New-York.

Notice.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot return rejected communications, nor preserve manuscripts, unless specially requested so to do.

To Advertisers.

Advertisers in the TIMES are requested to bring in their notices at as early an hour in the day as possible. Between 4 and 5 o'clock, it will be impossible to classify them under their proper heads.

Advertisements for the WEEKLY TIMES must be handed in before 10 o'clock this evening.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

A dispatch from London announces that severe earthquake shocks were felt in the neighborhood of Tabreez, Persia, on Sunday last. No serious damage resulted. It is asserted by a Paris newspaper that Russia urges the meeting of the Peace Conference, because she is anxious to prevent the expulsion of Greeks from Turkey, and says if the question is introduced the Turkish representative will leave the Conference.

Four of the insurgents at Malaga, Spain, who fired upon some refugees while under the protection of the American flag, were promptly punished by the General in command of that city. A Carlist conspiracy had been discovered in Barcelona and Saragossa, and many arrests have taken place. In Andalusia, many peasants have been driven by poverty to become freebooters, and have organized regular bands to plunder wealthy landholders.

CONGRESS.

The Senate assembled at the usual hour yesterday. The presiding officer presented communications from the Secretary of War relative to the number of troops engaged in service against the Indians, and from the Secretary of the Treasury inclosing the report of D. A. WELLS, Special Revenue Commissioner. A number of petitions were presented and referred. Mr. FESSENDEN offered a resolution requesting the President to forward a copy of his late Amnesty Proclamation, with a statement of the authority by which it was issued. Mr. FESSENDEN stated that while he was in favor of the proclamation he doubted the authority of the President to issue it. After some debate, during which several Republican Senators pronounced the proclamation an assumption of power on the part of the Executive, the resolution was adopted. Mr. WILSON introduced a bill providing for the issue and redemption of a national currency, which was referred to the Committee on Finances. The bill for the relief of SIDE MURPHY, of Alabama, for losses sustained by the war, was taken up and gave rise to a lengthy debate. Without disposing of the bill the Senate, after a brief Executive Session, adjourned.

Immediately upon the assembling of the House Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, reported from the Committee on Appropriations the bill making appropriations for consular and diplomatic expenses. The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole, to be taken up to-day as the special order, and so continued until disposed of. Mr. WASHBURNE offered a preamble and resolution reciting the facts set forth in the report of Mr. BALL, special Post Office agent, to the effect that WELLS, FARGO & Co. had neglected to convey the overland mails in accordance with their contract, but had left them exposed to the weather along the route, and directing the Postmaster-General to make no further payments to said contractors until these charges shall have been investigated. Objection was made to the consideration of the resolution at the present time. Mr. LYNCH, as a question of privilege, made an explanation relative to the newspaper charges made against him affecting that he had used his franks to liquidate newspapers. He admitted that he had franked many papers containing his speeches, and that he should continue to do so. Mr. SCOTT introduced a preamble and resolution setting forth that the resolutions recently passed in both Houses declaring the President for the financial recommendations contained in his message were an intrusion upon the rights of the Executive, and directing that 100,000 copies of the Message be printed for general distribution. Objection was made, and the resolution was not received. The House went into Committee of the Whole to consider the President's Message of 1867, and Mr. WINDOM made a speech on the subject of the Northern Pacific Railroad. At the conclusion of his remarks the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

The Senate was called to order yesterday by Lieut.-Gov. BROWN, who made a short address, after which a committee was appointed to inform the Governor and the Assembly that the Senate was duly organized. The Governor's Message was received and read, after which the Senate adjourned.

The Assembly was called to order by the Clerk of the last session, and immediately proceeded to ballot for Speaker, which resulted in the election of THOMAS G. YOUNGLOVE, of Saratoga. On taking the chair Mr. YOUNGLOVE made a short address, after which Mr. E. F. WOODWARD was chosen Clerk. Other officers were then selected and committees appointed to notify the Governor and Senate that the Assembly was ready for business. The Governor's Message was received and read by the Clerk. After the usual drawing for seats, a resolution proposing an adjournment from Thursday to the following Wednesday was laid on the table and the House adjourned.

GENERAL.

The three negroes who were sentenced to be hanged at Princess Anne, Md., on Friday, the 8th inst., for the murder of Capt. JOHNSON and his mate, CANNON, in Tangier Sound, in March last, have been respited to March 5, to await the trial of their companion, VALLEY, which will begin next week.

At a meeting of the Boston Board of Trade, on Monday, Mr. EDWARD ATKINSON introduced a series of resolutions against the Morrissey Tariff bill, the most important of which declares that "the increase proposed in said bill, in the taxes upon iron, steel and other metals, upon lumber, upon alkalies, upon glass and upon salt, are especially unwalled for, and would tend to enhance the excessive cost of the production of almost all other commodities, already so high as to have nearly destroyed our foreign commerce, and seriously to impair the comfort and prosperity of the people." The resolutions are to be considered at a special meeting on Saturday.

At a recent town meeting the people of Saratoga accepted the offer of a library from Hon. THOS. B. CARROLL, and resolved to erect a suitable building for its accommodation, and in connection with it a town hall, at cost from $50,000 to $75,000.

MANUEL SATTIE, the colored man arrested for the murder of a street-car driver named BALMAIN and his son, while on a car in New-Orleans, a few days ago, has been acquitted.

ELISHA R. BUSSELL, master of the whaling schooner D. W. Richards, of New-Bedford, was convicted in the United States Court, at Boston, yesterday, of assaulting one of his crew. He was also charged with withholding food from the crew, but the jury acquitted him of that indictment.

Mrs. TWITCHELL, of Philadelphia, who is charged with being the accomplice of her husband in the murder of her mother, yesterday made an appeal to the Court asking for a speedy trial. She protests her innocence. The Court fixed Monday, the 13th inst., as the time for commencing her trial.

The Boston Evening Traveller reports that Mr. LARRABEE, Postmaster of Salem, who has not been at his office for a week, is a defaulter, to the amount of $15,000 or $20,000.

A paper printed at Helena, Montana, says that in one of the famous mines in that district there are 1,000 tons of excellent ore ready to be crushed, and 10,000 tons of equally good quartz in sight, and that the ledge contains quartz worth $5,000,000.

The Board of Excise met yesterday and passed upon fourteen cases of violation of the Liquor law by dealers. Seven cases were postponed and two licenses were revoked.

From the report of the Croton Department for 1869 it appears that $1,019,544 36 were received for water rents, &c., being $55,676 95 more than in 1867. During the year six miles and five hundred and seventy-two feet of water pipes were laid.

Yesterday the Metropolitan Board of Health met and transacted a lengthy course of business. It was resolved to remove the slaughter-houses from below Fortieth-street at once. The United States Consul at Malta complained in an official letter that vessels were accustomed to leave that port without bills of health from him, and the Board ordered the Health Officer to investigate the matter. The Registrar of Vital Statistics reported that during the past week there were 267 deaths, 822 births, and 119 marriages in this City, and 139 in Brooklyn. During the past year there were 24,889 deaths in New-York. The Board will meet hereafter on Mondays instead of Tuesdays.

The annual meeting of the New-York Historical Society was held last evening at the hall of the Society, corner of Eleventh-street and Second-avenue. In the absence of the President, Mr. SCHELL, Chairman of the Executive Committee, was called to the Chair. The annual reports were submitted, from which it appears the Society is in a flourishing condition. All the officers of the Society were unanimously reflected.

The Ninth Regiment, National Guard, New-York State, gave their annual ball last night at the Academy of Music. It was very brilliant, and numerously attended.

Prof. DOREMUS lectured last evening at the College of New-York, on electricity.

The steamship Europe, from Havre Dec. 17 and Brest Dec. 19, reached this port yesterday. Capt. LEMARIE has our thanks for late Paris papers.

Cotton sold quite freely yesterday at a further advance in prices. Breadstuffs and Provisions were attracting more attention, and were quoted much stronger in the leading instances. Groceries remative. Freights lower, on a moderate business.

The Industry and Capital of the Country—Report of Mr. Wells.

We had frequent occasion, at the beginning of last year, to refer to the very great value of the annual report (it was then the second) of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue, Mr. DAVID A. WELLS.

The report he has made this year,—and of which we give nearly the whole to-day,—will be found no less suggestive and valuable, no less clear, strong and accurate, no less instructive to Congress and interesting to the country at large, than that of last year. We shall doubtless have occasion, from time to time, to discuss its principles and propositions, and at present will only refer to its leading features and points.

Mr. WELLS is not an optimist, in the sense of seeking to put a favorable face on everything that presents itself, and yet he always shows himself to be possessed, in a large degree, of the strong American characteristic of hope,—which, based itself on a vigorous faith in the national character, an intelligent knowledge of the national condition, and a firm belief in the predominance and assured triumph of those visible and invisible elements of national power which have always asserted themselves whenever they were necessary to the national life. He is no theorist, after the fashion of those whom NAPOLEON hated as Idéologists; but, on the contrary, as he himself says, he institutes investigations for the purpose of reaching facts, and seeks rather to determine, through the collection of positive data, the legislative policy that will be advantageous to the country's industry and the public revenues. In thus applying the Baconian method to these questions, he has been able, in his several reports, to furnish Congress a body of suggestions eminently worthy of their consideration.

In opening his views on the present condition of the capital and industry of the country, he shows, on the one hand, the indications that the country is resuming its wonderful career of progress and development; and, on the other hand, he shows that agencies are in existence which tend to arrest or obstruct the national advancement. The favorable signs are such as these: (1) The large immigration of the last few years; (2) the general increase in the products of domestic industry; (3) the continued increase in agricultural productions, whether measured by quantity or value; (4) railway and telegraphic extension. On all these points he furnishes statistics and facts, which constitute the very best kind of argument.

In discussing the agencies concerned in the national development, he treats of our great natural resources, and the free institutions which permit their unfettered development. In regard to the relation of special legislation to the growth of industry, he holds that we require but little of it; and on this point he gives some facts for the high-tariff men that they will find somewhat difficult of digestion. After remarking that all investigation shows that the facts are entirely contrary to what may be regarded as the popular belief, which, indeed, in this particular, would appear to be based on little else than mere assertions, which, remaining for a long time unquestioned, have at last acquired the force of accepted historical truth,—he shows that the tariff of 1842 did not, as has been constantly asserted, stimulate the production of pig iron, and then brings forward data in regard to ship-building, the production of coal and cotton, railroad construction, &c., which strengthen his position. He sums up in the following striking words the lesson which is derived from the study of all the facts pertaining to national development:

"The progress of the country through what we may term the strength of its elements of vitality is independent of legislation, and even of the impoverishment and waste of a great war. Like one of our own mighty rivers, its movement is beyond control. Successive years, like successive affluents, only add to and increase its volume; while legislative enactments and conflicting commercial policies, like the construction of piers and the deposit of sunken wrecks, simply deflect the current, or constitute temporary obstructions. In fact, if the nation has not yet been taught to the full comprehension of its own work, it builds determinately, as it were, by instinct."

The results of the war constitute the per contra upon the national ledger which shows the development of industry. Reference is made to the greatly increased cost of nearly all forms of labor and commodities, while this is regarded as the resultant mainly of three agencies growing out of the war, viz.: irredeemable paper currency, unequal and heavy taxation, and a limited supply of skilled labor, the last manifesting itself at the present time in specialties rather than in general. These points, actual and comparative, are very elaborately discussed, on the basis of long and careful investigations in respect to the retail prices of the leading articles of domestic consumption by operatives in different sections and States of the country. Nowhere else have we anything like as full and reliable statistics as Mr. WELLS furnishes on these matters. He gives tables showing the average aggregate weekly earnings of families in 1867, the average weekly expenditure of families, and the average weekly expenditures of laboring men at different periods for articles of household necessity. From a vast mass of data he comes to the conclusion that whether we adopt money or flour as the standard for the comparison of wages and commodities, in 1860 and 1867, the result is not dissimilar, viz.: the purchasing power of the irredeemable paper money now in use is not nearly equal to what it was in the immediate ante-war years of 1860-'61; and that the working men and women of the country do not now receive as much in return for their labor as before the war. The result of the whole has been that the rich have become richer and the poor poorer.

Mr. WELLS then discusses taxation, as it exists (1) under the internal revenue, (2) under the tariff, (3) under State and local laws. We have only time, at this moment, to commend his views here given on protection and the tariff to the consideration of all our readers, whatever be the views they may have adopted; and we venture to say that high-tariff men, as well as free-traders, will find ideas and facts which will furnish them food for thought during the rest of the year.

Having fully surveyed the productive development and industrial position of the country, and the comparative condition of workers and capitalists, Mr. WELLS comes to the financial state and policy of the country. He analyzes the national receipts and expenditures, and shows where retrenchment may be effected. He discusses resumption, and refunding at a lower rate of interest; and he indicates the means by which he believes the national credit may be elevated and taxation reduced. He closes with some excellent suggestions regarding the reduction of tariff duties and the simplification of our revenue system.

We have read none of the public documents recently issued from the different Departments of the Government with so deep an interest as this. We have found none of them in the various parts of which we could so fully agree. We have found none of them in which the facts were more carefully collected or set forth with equal clearness and intelligence. There is none of them equally deserving of popular study, or in which questions are so admirably brought within popular comprehension.

The Government and the Telegraph.

At the recent banquet given to Prof. MORSE, reference was very properly made by at least one of the speakers to the proposition which has been advanced in some quarters to place the telegraph under the control of the Government. It was stated, furthermore, that the only bill pending before Congress providing for such control did not contemplate acquiring the present system of lines, but proposed to commence the construction of new lines by putting up one of four wires between this City and Washington. This is the plan of which Hon. Mr. WASHBURNE is the father, and for the purpose of collecting information for its development he is understood to have made a special trip to Europe a year ago. We would be glad to have him inform us in what European country he found the precedent for his scheme to appropriate the public money to enable the Government to embark in a competition with its own citizens.

It was certainly not in England, for although the British Government has decided to make the telegraph a department of the postal service, its first movement in that direction was to open negotiations for the purchase of all the existing lines. The result of these negotiations is an agreement to sell to the Government for a sum equal to twenty times the net profits of the present year, such profits to be ascertained by Commissioners appointed for that purpose.

This appears to be a liberal arrangement toward the telegraph owners, and one which our companies would undoubtedly be willing to accept; and yet it is no more than any Government should be ready to give in consideration of the perpetual surrender by its citizens of their right to profit by investments in a business which is destined to become of such immense importance as the telegraph. But we are opposed to the assumption of private enterprises by our Government on any terms. There can be nothing pleaded in justification, unless it be public necessity. In the case of the telegraph no such necessity exists. Certainly there is no lack of facilities between this City and the national capital. On this route three rival companies have been operating competing lines for several years, and a fourth is now erecting another set. Either possesses facilities equal to those proposed in the Washburne bill, and one of them vastly greater. Nor are the charges on this route excessive. Two of the companies have thus far been unable to make any dividends, and the ability of the third to do so, at low rates, cannot have been materially assisted by the profits on the business between these points.

Mr. WASHBURNE proposes to make the tariff on his line fifteen cents for ten words, instead of forty cents, the rate now charged. Is the mere difference of twenty-five cents per message in favor of those having occasion to use the telegraph between these points a consideration of such importance as to justify the Government in expending a large sum directly, and, perhaps, indirectly destroying existing property which cost vastly more? But he will probably answer, this is to be an experiment to test the practicability of operating the telegraph by the Government at low rates. Then why not try the experiment where the results will prove something? Men of largest experience in the management of the telegraph claim that their business is mainly dependent on trade and commerce, and that merely personal and social communications constitute but a small item in the aggregate number of messages; that a small manufacturing town will give greater returns than another of much larger population but less enterprising in trade. An experiment to test the correctness of these opinions might claim consideration if it were to be instituted between places to which private enterprise denied the telegraph, on the ground that it could not be made to pay. But we are inclined to coincide in the above opinion, and to believe that the lines under private control will everywhere follow closely the demands of business at all points which promise even moderate profits. We believe, however, that the companies will find it for their interest to offer the public lower average rates; first, because the business will thereby increase more rapidly, and secondly because the operation of competing lines, which will be constructed to meet the demand for lower rates, will, by dividing their receipts, diminish their profits more than would probably result from liberal reductions in advance of competition.

Gov. Hoffman's Message.

Gov. HOFFMAN has sent into the Legislature an elaborate and valuable message, discussing the usual subjects of general and special interest,—the finances, the canals, the State prisons, the banks, the questions of education, public charitable institutions, immigration, quarantine, and public health, the cattle disease, the militia, and the relations of the State to the City of New-York, including the matters of excise laws, municipal government, and "the purity of elections." He even finds space to protest against "Federal centralization;" but he might have spared his parting fling, which is both unnecessary and in bad taste, against Congress, for "having directed its efforts to the suppression of representation and the subversion of republican government in the States."

Beginning with the customary summary of the finances and indebtedness of the State, Gov. HOFFMAN tells us that the net amount of the State's indebtedness at the end of the fiscal year (i. e., Sept. 30, 1867) was "only $38,864,449 74." It, therefore, becomes obvious that, as over $6,000,000 balances of sinking funds have accumulated applicable to the redemption of the debt, at this rate, the sinking funds will extinguish the whole debt within nine years.

Touching the canals, it appears that the present balance of the canal fund is $4,698,922 44, as against $3,840,935 66 for the year previous; and that the canal revenues for 1868 were nearly half a million in excess of those of 1867, and their current expenses nearly $900,000 less than the recent annual average. The surplus revenue has been sufficient to pay the balance of the canal debt of 1846 and to contribute over $100,000 "to defray the necessary expenses of the Government." The Governor touches somewhat diplomatically on the dangerous question of "canal policy," but announces himself as being in favor of "thorough repair," and especially of having the water-way restored to its full dimensions, and even incidentally and progressively enlarged. With the State Engineer, he considers the present system of repairs to be a dead failure.

Of our prison system, he says that it "abounds in evils and errors," and that he is "satisfied the prisons can be better managed, as well in respect to finances as discipline." He thinks that agents, wardens and keepers "have too often been selected from political considerations only;" that the contract system for prisoners' labor injures discipline, and does not pay; and that convict labor should be entirely directed by the Prison Superintendents, and its fruits sold for the benefit of the State. He adds the very judicious suggestion that a small portion of the prisoner's earnings should be laid aside for his benefit, to be paid when he is discharged, by way of incentive to good conduct and to hope for the future. True public policy, as well as philanthropy, approves this wise recommendation. Under this head, also, the Governor takes strong ground against the outrageous practice of detaining in jail witnesses in criminal cases, when unable to give security for their appearance at the trial of the accused. Poor strangers, friendless, often with families dependent on them, they are made the victims of crime, and are often left in prison while the alleged criminal is at large on bail. It is suggested that here is a good field for remedial legislation.

The Governor says nothing of insurance, and little of banks; but he notes, with evident satisfaction, the case of the Albany bank that "has evinced its confidence in the free banking system of the State of New-York, by returning to it from the national system." As to the militia, we are told it is "sound and prosperous," being now between 25,000 and 30,000 strong, and mainly consisting of the fifty regiments and three battalions of infantry, with very much smaller forces of artillery and cavalry. The Governor says he will aim to still further reduce the expenses of the National Guard, without impairing its efficiency.

The message urges the immediate building of the new Capitol on the site now fixed upon. It recommends an amendment of the Cattle Disease law of 1866, to increase its efficiency. Regarding the Quarantine, the Governor believes in the stability of the foundation laid for the West Bank Hospital, but "suggests an addition to the rip raps for further security;" and he also asks legislation for the other quarantine structure on West Bank, since begun. He notes a decline of the arrival of 213,706 alien immigrants during the year, and the decrease of 29,023 from 1867—attributable, he thinks, to unsettled politics, and to the efforts of other States to attract immigration by direct steam communication to Europe.

As to the codes, Gov. HOFFMAN recommends "an immediate reform in our criminal laws," and particularly a statute, (this is an interesting point,) whereby a jury may render, in a case of homicide not, in their opinion, deserving death, a verdict of murder of a less degree, to be punished by imprisonment for a term of years, the maximum to be fixed by laws.

To the relations of the State and City of New-York the Governor devotes the most careful and elaborate part of his message. His ground, of course, can be anticipated. He holds the creation of the "Metropolitan District" to be a clear violation of the State Constitution, and (though probably not very confidently) he "recommends the repeal of the present law" creating the district. At great length he then urges the injustice wrought in depriving the "local authorities" of New-York, Brooklyn, &c., of sundry powers formerly held by them; and he particularly recommends the repeal of the Excise law, as being a needless, arbitrary, unwise and despotic enactment. Here he also asks for legislation for the New-York wharves and piers. Then, with rather a virtuous indignation, the Governor eloquently appeals for "purity of the ballot," denounces illegal voting, "and demands that the corrupt use of money in elections should be severely punished."

From this point Gov. HOFFMAN diverges into national politics, protesting against vesting in Congress the control of suffrage in the States, and against putting obstacles in the way of naturalization; and with these and some general words deprecating party violence, the Message closes. Let us trust that our new Governor will have firmness and patriotism enough to give us what he promises, so far as he is concerned, to give—"the blessings of an economical, a prudent, and a wise Government."

Government Aid to Railroads and to the Port of New-York.

It is well understood that there is an immense pressure at Washington to secure, between now and the 4th of March, enactments that will give millions of acres of the public land to railway projects, and that members of Congress are the most active, if not the most interested, agents in carrying through these schemes. The public lands have not all been given away to Western States and to Western improvements: but one-half of them, as they have become accessible and marketable, have. It has been computed that lands belonging to the people of all the States and as much the property of the Eastern as of Western States, to the amount of more than one hundred millions of dollars in value, have been given away to Western interests. And now we see a new brood of schemes pressed upon Congress, which will leave nothing of these lands to the people except the right to survey and map them at the public expense.

If the 4th of March can be reached before the title of the people to the public lands is lost, we need not have much anxiety for their future safety. The veto of Gen. GRANT will effectually stop these plundering schemes, and hence it is that the hungry in and outside of Congress are making their last and desperate attack on the nation's resources, in the hope of carrying off the spoils before the 4th of March.

The City and Port of New-York contributes nearly as much to the support of the Government as all the rest of the Union put together. Not only does it do this, but to promote the iron interests of Pennsylvania, and the manufacturing interests of New-England, the foreign shipping and carrying trade of New-York has been destroyed by Congressional action. Thus, to the East of us, and to the West of us, the Government, by direct donations and by favoring legislation, has been giving countless millions, while all this City and Port receives from Congress is the privilege of paying the bills to advance these local interests and sustain the Government.

Our East River is the commercial maelstrom of this westerly continent. The most important area of the Union, it is the least improved, and is, in the development of its commercial facilities and commercial capacities, in as primitive a condition as any portion of the wilderness lying between the Mississippi and the Pacific. Its rocks and reefs and whirlpools, in the gateway of our national port, have been a disgrace to us as a commercial nation for at least a half-century past.

These grants of land and money to aid railroads find their only authority in the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States. There is more of this foreign commerce and of the commerce of the several States passing through the East River in one day, than will ever pass over any or all of the Pacific Railroads in a week.

We have, therefore, a right to demand, in view of the enormous contributions which this City has made in the past, and is now making toward the financial sustenance of the Government, in view of its enormous donations to the other portions of the country, and of none here, that for every acre of land and dollar of money that may be given hereafter to aid railroads, a fair proportion of the same shall be given to improve the Port and Harbor of New-York. If the Congressional delegation from this State shall prove faithful to its interests and to the interests of their constituents, either these schemes for Government aid will fail, or New-York will get some small share of what is due to it from the nation.

The Prevalence of Crime and the Moral of the Murders.

We gave an elaborate account lately of the remarkable poisoning cases at Marseilles, France, as an illustration of the very general prevalence of crime and the very singular administration of justice in France. We have lately had in this country a series of crimes not less remarkable, and they have served to illustrate more than one of the absurdities of the law as enforced, or rather as not enforced in America.

The late assassination of H. Ervin PUGSLEY, and the wholesale massacre of the Reece in the New-Albany (Indiana) jail, are painful evidences not only of an increasing disregard for human life, but a growing irreverence for the laws of the country. In the one case a whole community openly applauded a most cowardly assassination; in the other an entire community turned assassins, and breaking open the public jail, executed suspected criminals surrendered for trial by a neighboring friendly Power, with the expressed understanding that they were to have a fair trial. It is no excuse to say that in both instances the victims were dangerous characters, and that justice only was dealt out to them. For the sake of the argument we might admit as much. The outrages—the crimes of young GRANT and the Richmond people who applauded him, and that of the Seymour Vigilance men—were not so much against the dead victims as the living laws and those for whose protection they were enacted. The law cannot be thus violated, and the violators go unpunished, without losing its sanctity and power. Other individuals and gangs of men will be incited by the success of GRANT and the Seymour men to similar acts, in revenge for real or fancied wrongs at the hands of known or suspected persons; and thus will be brought about a system of mob law, as horrible in its enforcement as the crime it proposes to punish. The offence of POTLARD, gross enough, it is true, was innocence compared to that of GRANT; and all the evil deeds of REECE and his companions are as nothing compared to the heinous crime of their assassins. In both these cases it is the living law-abiding public, not the dead criminals and slanderer, who are outraged; and it is the living who demand the trial and punishment of these violators of the law which should be the protection of all.

The murder of Mr. ROGERS in front of his residence in Twelfth-street, within a block of the busiest thoroughfare of this City, in broad daylight, is a most painful illustration of the ineffectiveness of our Police organization as a preventive force. A fact, we have more than once presented in these columns. Mr. ROGERS was deliberately attacked in the open street by an armed ruffian, while another stood guard near by and looked on; after being stabbed he was robbed of his watch and pocket-book; and the murderers walked off with their booty and remain unapprehended to this day. No policeman was in sight or hearing, and in explanation of this fact, the Police Captain in charge of the district states that his force on the morning of the murder was so small that each officer had twice his usual ground to watch. In other words, the force, as we have long known and frequently stated, is totally inadequate to prevent crime. In this instance it has been less effective than usual in detecting the criminals. It is apparent from the boldness of the attack that the criminals knew the whereabouts of the Police officers; but the Police do not seem to have seen or known anything of the criminals. This case has, also, an illustration of the operation of the law which will not be understood or appreciated by all. A man living in the vicinity of the murder hears that he is suspected of having committed it, and at once repairs to the nearest Station-house and delivers himself into custody, declaring his innocence. He is taken before the wounded man, who declares positively that he is not the man who injured him, nor his companion who looked on. Still the man is held as a prisoner,—on what grounds it is difficult to imagine.

Early on New-Year's morning a gang of five rowdies, who had been gambling and drinking all night in the public saloon of the St. Barnard House, in this City, became enraged, and at once began firing at each other, to the imminent danger of all others in the saloon and of the passers by in the street. They were arrested and taken to prison, where they were locked up in one cell, or at least in cells communicating; for it appears that during their brief imprisonment of a few hours, their blood being cooled, they arranged a treaty of peace for their mutual protection and the defeat of the law. And, singularly enough, their weak invention for this purpose succeeded. On being arraigned they one and all declared they had no charge to make against each other; and so were discharged! Nothing at once more ridiculous or flagrant can be conceived than such a dénouement to such an outrage. Only the criminals themselves seem to have had any recognized rights in the Court; the offended public were unrepresented by Police or prosecuting attorney, and the criminals were discharged because they did not choose to prosecute each other for the crime against the public which they had jointly committed. A distinguished prisoner lately escaped from the clutches of the law on the plea of momentary insanity; a great many more seem to be escaping through the insanity—or something worse—of the legal authorities.

From Canada comes another late illustration of the ignorance and unreasonableness of jurors. A man named JONES was accused of murdering his niece, and was convicted, not because there was any real evidence against him, but because the jury saw a motive for the deed in the enmity existing between the prisoner and the father of the victim. During the trial the prisoner's daughter confessed that she alone had committed the murder, and stated that her father knew nothing of the deed for hours after it was done. The jury, however, disregarded the confession, as far as it exculpated the father, and found him guilty of murder in the first degree. At the same time it accepted the confession as far as it implicated the girl herself, and condemned her to ten years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary. The man was hung, protesting his innocence; the girl was remanded to prison, declaring her guilt!

We are having just now what some of our contemporaries need to delight in calling "an epidemic of crime." Murders simply horrible in themselves, and without other moral than the degeneracy of the age, are occurring every day. We have murders with motives and without; murders committed in moments of passion and expiated by immediate suicide; murders prompted by avarice, jealousy, and all the other passions, and also by political and social questions. All classes of society are implicated; all the various and varied communities of the different States are involved, and criminal trials and executions are occurring in all districts of the country. Public opinion and the organized authorities appear to be quite disregarded; and every evidence displayed of a disrespect for the laws. Crime is committed with a singular publicity, little effort being made at concealment, and criminals do not appear any longer to dread that the laws will be enforced against them. The evil tendency of all this can be readily imagined. We are hastening in this way to a dangerous condition of society,—a condition in which the protection which the laws no longer afford will be sought by those illegal organizations which have at different times appeared in various disorganized communities, and which invariably become greater abuses than those which they were intended to correct.

The best check and cure for these epidemics of crime have generally been found in the hands of the Judges of our criminal courts, and a few sensible and earnest Grand Juries, under charges from as many sensible Judges, awake to the necessity of vigorous action against criminals, will form a most admirable preventive power, and put a sudden end to criminal excesses. It is the demoralization and laxity of the law which produces the demoralization of society, and the law must be enforced before society can be reformed.

MINOR TOPICS.

Congress reassembled yesterday. The brief session of eight weeks ought not only to be a busy session, but a fruitful one. There is plenty of good work before it, and there are any quantity of corrupt, foolish and rumous schemes before it. We shall see which of these calls out most effort and labor.

Mr. YOUNGLOVE was yesterday elected Speaker of the House at Albany, and the fact has already been telegraphed abroad as favorable to the chances of FENTON as against MORGAN in the contest for United States Senator. But it is a fortnight till the Senatorial election; and who can tell what may happen in a fortnight?

We think Mayor HALL acted wisely in not sending a message to the Common Council on the first day of his accession to office. It seems to have occurred to him, first of all our Mayors, that no man could be expected to know intuitively all about City affairs, and that it would be better to wait until he had had a chance to study the subject a little before he undertook to enlighten the world about it. Mr. HALL is a man of great practical good sense, and is not likely to talk nonsense when he does send in a message. We hope he will tell us a few of the many things which the City needs, and then suggest some way of getting them. He can help us to one,—if he has a mind to,—and that is, a good Mayor. Suppose he tries?

The dwellers down town are reduced to the lowest pitch of wretchedness, as will be readily conceded when it is understood that they actually deplore the demolition of the Lowe bridge! But it is next to impossible to cross Broadway at Fulton-street, or indeed anywhere else, without being run over by vehicles or smothered in slush, or both; and bad as it was architecturally and otherwise, the Lowe bridge did make it possible to escape these disasters. The wisdom and good sense of the Common Council in ordering the destruction of that bridge at the only period when it could possibly be of use, commands, as it ought, general admiration.

In the name of thousands of respectable but powerless men, women and children, whose wants are entitled to consideration, we appeal to all our ferry corporations for the prompt performance of a simple duty. The crosswalks leading from the ferry gates, in these days of thaw, are entirely overflowed and hidden by the vile and pasty slush. It would be a small matter to keep them clear, as they are mainly contiguous to the culverts; but even if the case were otherwise it is the bound duty of the ferry people to afford their patrons a decent passage to and from the ferry gates. We are glad to see that Mr. WELLINGS is making some attempt to divert the semi-liquid accumulations of Broadway into the culverts by opening the gutters. He might do more in this direction. The Police, also, are remiss in not enforcing the law which requires the choked gutters to be kept clear by the occupants of buildings. Does this neglect grow out of laxity in the office of the Corporation Counsel in prosecuting complaints? By a very small effort on the part of all concerned we would be speedily relieved of the tribulations which now beset us all.

We actually saw a policeman yesterday take a broom in his hands and help clear an overflowing gutter, so as that the water could run off, and foot passengers cross the street without danger of drowning. What increase of salary a policeman who has so practical a sense of duty, and who is so ready to do it, deserves, we can scarcely imagine. Would $25,000 a year be too much? Considering the number of men who want to be policemen, we should answer Yes;—but considering the very small number who are inclined to imitate his example for any smaller sum, we should say No. We commend his case to the reflections of the "ring."

In view of the dilemma in which Congress might have found itself in dealing with the general question of reconstruction in Georgia, it is very pleasant to get even the telegraphic rumor that the Legislature of that State proposes to pass resolutions deliratory of its willingness to abide by the decision of the Supreme Court of the State or of the United States upon the point at issue. Reconstruction would be very embarrassing. The Georgians seem about to be blessed with returning sense.

The Duke of Buckingham did a very shabby thing by the Canadians before leaving office. The supply of Baronetcies and Knight-Commanderships of the Bath at the disposal of the British Government being utterly insufficient to meet the views of the aspiring politicians of the new Dominion, some plan had to be devised by which the coveted title of "Sir" might be more liberally conferred. But instead of creating a new order of colonial knighthood, which might easily have been done, His Grace of Buckingham has vam and St. George, belonging to the Knight Archdukes, formerly under British protectorate, but ceded to Greece several years ago. It is to be enlarged and remodeled, and its Grand Crosses, Knight-Commanderships and Companionships are to be conferred on all who have earned marked distinctions in Colonial politics, in the Dominion and elsewhere. So the Candidacy for whom, of course, the lion's share of the new Grecian dignity is intended, will, we hope, duly and reverently honor St. Michael and St. George in company with the Sir Spiridons and Sir Demetrius of the late Septinsular Republic.

The reply of Col. FRENCH CLARK, of the Seventh Regiment, to the circular inviting his command to a contest for the championship of the First Division, refusing the challenge, is characterized by a great deal of good sense, which may be epitomized as follows: 1. The regiment does not desire to hold any emblem signifying its superiority over other organizations. Its members are content to do their duty according to their best ability, and the approbation of the public is their sufficient reward. 2. Competition of the sort proposed invariable produces bad blood, jealousies and heart-burnings. 3. Permanent injury is entailed upon any regiment which lends itself to contests for excellence in drill, because injustice is done to individual members in taking their time for purposes which are outside of the legitimate end of the organization. These are sensible premises, and the position thus assumed cannot be controverted. The feeble threat of the challengers that "regiments avoiding or declining the contest will, under the circumstances, be considered as disavowing the claim to be the best drilled," amounts to nothing. So long as a militia regiment performed its duty faithfully, the public will assign it its proper grade in drill, discipline and general efficiency.

The Church of the Holy Trinity in Brooklyn, whose rector, Rev. Dr. LITTLEJOHN, was recently elected to be Bishop of the new Diocese of Long Island, has done an excellent thing in asking Rev. CHARLES H. HALL, D. D., of Washington, to take his place. The soundness and sense of Dr. HALL's ministrations in the Epiphany Church, of that city, are well known to thousands who found their way to his church during the crowded war-days of the national capital. Besides being a vigorous manager, an able thinker, an effective preacher and a tender pastor, Dr. HALL is essentially a manly man, one fully alive to the peculiar evils of the day, and by no means timid in setting them forth. He is also a gentleman of fine culture; and if Brooklyn succeeds in gaining him, she will have made a worthy addition to her unusually fine array of clerical talent.

It is certainly unfortunate that we are in a condition where the sword of the army has to be used for cutting the Gordian knots over which civil authorities fash themselves in vain. But the military element seems the surest in dealing with difficult cases, and the shortest as well. We remarked the other day the quick solution of doubts as to the friendship or hostility of Indians since the army has taken hold in earnest on the Plains. The riotous troubles on the Ogeechee River in Georgia, on being taken charge of by the military authorities, instantly quieted down; the negroes announced themselves willing to surrender to the United States authorities, and did so, and the prospect now is for quiet.

The singular bill about to be brought into Congress by Senator PRATNER and Representative GRAHAM, for a Central Indian Railroad, to be built by the Indians themselves, is full of suggestion, as indicating the spirit in which the Indian remnant on this continent should be treated. If these Cherokees, Chickasaws, Creeks, Choctaws and Seminoles can be brought in such a way still further within the pale of our civilization, the wilder tribes may in some similar manner be led to identify themselves with the general well-being of the country. Is there any fatal necessity which obliges us to destroy them for having their natural savage feelings on the subject of their own country? Any plan of conciliating, instead of clearing them off, would be worthy of every consideration. If no lobby jobbery is in the way, it would be a happy piece of legislation that would make these Creeks and Choctaws proprietors of a railroad—an American achievement on a level with many that have recently won the praise of foreigners, and one that would lead those unhappy Buffalo hunters to think we are friendly to the red race, after all.

Ever since the Big Organ came to Boston, the people have been wild on the subject of "big things" in music. They are now getting up a "big concert"—on "the Common," of course; and all the Eastern papers are agog with it. One of them says "it shall eclipse all the former musical efforts of the world." A second says that "the man who has no music in himself will soon find Boston a poor abiding place." A third declares that there will "be no discordant elements in the programme, but the great zeal of harmony will," and so forth, and so forth. An orchestra of a thousand instruments, a chorus of twenty thousand voices, (to say nothing of a battery of artillery let off by electricity,) ought to make a noise, at least. Let us hope that this grandiose attempt will not illustrate the fact that it does not make a man a great painter to use a big brush.

Editing in the "far West" seems to be a process of knifing as well as "scissoring." The editor of the Cuyahoga Avalanche informs his readers that "the other day, while quietly seated in our sanctum, two villians, one armed with a hatchet, and the other with a Bowie knife, made a violent attack upon our person." Nothing appalled, "we seized a knife about two feet long, used for cutting paper, and bled our assailants freely. They sued for mercy." One naturally inquires for the reason of so strange a rencontre; and the editor tells us that it took place merely because "we lately referred directly to a ruffian known as Capt. PRENOW, and incidentally to a guerrilla named AL. LEES." It is astonishing to find so courteous a reference met by so discourteous a remonstrance—but we suppose that is local etiquette.

It is an awful fact that in England, since the beginning of the year 1866, more than six hundred men and boys have been killed by explosions in the collieries. And even the smallest catastrophes of that kind number more victims than the most terrible railway accidents. And yet this is in the face of extraordinary care in the constant application of scientific principles for ventilation. Great stress has been laid, of late, upon more accurate readings and registrations of the barometer and thermometer, as it is during their most rapid changes that explosions are likely to happen. The accumulation of fire-damp can be prevented only by the commercial-working weight of a column of air. When, by a general contraction of the outer atmosphere, this is partially withdrawn, the deadly gas is ever ready to rush out and devour its victims with fiery death. We trust that the managers of our fire-damping mines are keeping themselves awake to these evils, and the accumulating records of experience which alone can help to prevent them. Careful habits of observation and registration ought to be part of the constant training in our collieries; likely growth in Sight is growth in danger.

AFFAIRS IN GEORGIA

Settling with Plantation Hands—Labor Prospects for 1869—Scientific Discoveries, Alexander H. Stephens and the University—Remarkable Returns in Rose Rock and a New Discovery.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CRAWFORD, OGLETHORPE COUNTY, Ga., Thursday, Dec. 31, 1868.

Christmas, instead of being a merry season, which every one tries to be happy according to his means and capacity, is now, in all agricultural populations in these parts, the most anxious, troublesome and harassing time of the year. It is the time when the planters settle with their laborers for the past year, and try to compute how to divide their crops, explain the mysteries of their cotton bales, the varying price of the cotton, the cost of bagging, rope and freight, and the more mysterious and complex charges of the factors. They have to work various sums in vulgar fractions to show the share of half, three-quarters and two-thirds of hands, and after all the demonstrations, explanations and calculations, they have to convince the negroes that they have rendered unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and that the accounts are correct and just.

This is not by any means as easy as it might appear to those who have never tried it practically. I have witnessed the operation on the farm of a friend who plants in this county, and who has been engaged the whole week in settling the accounts of his laborers. He had about fifteen freedmen to satisfy, and though I never saw clearer or more self-evident accounts, it seemed almost impossible to make the negroes comprehend them or be content with the result. They could not understand that some of the bales weighed more than others, and that some sold at more per pound than others; that the charges on some were more than on others, and that the quality varied. They could only understand that a certain number of bales were sent to market, and that cotton sold this year at twenty-three cents. Most of them had no idea of the amount of goods of various sorts which the employer had bought and advanced to them during the year, and though, as the items were read, they all acknowledged their correctness and their correspondence with the charges made at the time in their several memorandum books, when the total amount was read they could not be made to admit that they owed "that much." From all this I deduced the moral, which is entirely plain to me, that it is clearly better for the planter to give his hands stated monthly wages in money, and give them regular rations, and have nothing whatever to do with any other purchases for them. Wherever the contrary system is practiced I have seen confusion and discontent, and though I am persuaded that the negro makes more on an average of years by a share in the crop, he is never as well satisfied as where he is paid his wages with no drawbacks or advances.

From what I have seen and heard, the negroes in this part of the State have cleared for their year's work from $100 to $150, all of which, in an hour after it was paid, was spent in the nearest store for every imaginable article, from a flute or melodeon to a yard of osnaburgs or a pair of breeches.

There is a greater difficulty this year than there was last to engage hands for the whole twelve months. The negroes have a marked indisposition to contract for so long a time, and desire to engage by the day, or, at the longest, by the month, believing that they can make more by "jobbing about." They hear of a day laborer having earned near a town 75 cents or $1 per day, and, without making any deduction for wet days, failure to get jobs, sickness, or any other cause, imagine that they can make a sum equal to 75 cents per day throughout the year. Then, again, many think that "to go to themselves another year" is the sure way to be healthy, wealthy and wise, and not a few think that when "GRANT comes in" the real day of jubilee will have arrived, and that it is the part of prudence to have no entangling alliances when that day arrives. To-morrow is the day when work should commence, but there are very few who will be able to make the start or have the hands to prepare for a crop. Everyone is on the alert, anxious and perplexed.

POLITICAL MATTERS.

In the political world perfect calm has existed during the holidays. I have not heard of a single Kuklux, and since I left Augusta I have not heard of BROWNLOW's sins or BULLOCK's enormities. The people seem to have made up their minds to being "reconstructed over again," and believe that EBURNE' bill will pass, while they ask who is EBURNE and what is his bill?

Mr. NELSON TIFT, member of Congress from the Second Congressional District, (situated in Southwestern Georgia,) has just issued a circular letter from Washington, addressed to the judicial officers of the State, from Judge of the Supreme Court to Inkendant of a village, asking them to send him, to be laid before the Reconstruction Committee, answers to the following eight questions:

1. Are the laws faithfully and impartially administered?
2. Is there any organized or unorganized resistance to the law?
3. Are the officers of the law faithful to their duties?
4. What are the disposition, feeling and treatment of the whites toward the blacks?
5. What toward the Republicans?
6. What toward Northern men visiting or desiring to settle in Georgia?
7. Do the people desire peace and a restoration of their proper relation to the States and Government of the Union?
8. Is there in your opinion any necessity or justification for the proposed destruction of the present Government of Georgia and the establishment of a military or provisional Government?

Mr. TIFT shows his purpose to be to defeat BULLOCK's proposed plans, by making known to the Committee the truth on the above subjects. As most of the Judges owe their appointments to BULLOCK, and as many of them are active Republicans, their testimony will doubtless have much weight with the Committee. Mr. TIFT himself is a native of Connecticut. He settled in Georgia many years ago, made a considerable fortune, represented his county (Dougherty) frequently in the State Legislature, and in a district overwhelmingly black, was elected as a Democrat by a large majority.

The National Republican, of Augusta, which used to be the organ of Mr. BULLOCK and what is known as the "Augusta Ring," has ceased to exist, or rather has relapsed into its primary shape—the Press—in which it appeared soon after the war, as a cheap, enterprising, independent newspaper. It is said that partisan politics did not pay, and that the proprietor, Mr. PUGH, partly from conviction and partly from interest, resolved to oppose the recent conduct of the Governor. It is a straw, and shows how the wind blows in certain quarters.

MR. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

Mr. ALEX. H. STEPHENS has been in Atlanta for some days, to see if he can make arrangements to accept the Professorship of History to which he was elected in the beginning of this month by the Trustees of the University of Georgia. He is very anxious to accept and devote the remainder of his life to literature and instruction; but he is not sure that he can do so without interfering too much with his engagements as a practicing lawyer. And in the preparation of the second volume of his book upon the late war. It is universally hoped that he will accept the position. He would be a great accretion to the University, because, in addition to his scholarship and eminent qualifications for the place, his popularity would do vast benefit to the institution.

Engineer of Boston, we have a new toy in City

[illegible] from the [illegible] on the subject of one Baumann [illegible] Everybody can cure himself of all the diseases to which flesh is heir by the mere use of [illegible]. When we intend to cure ourselves of any disease, we have only to "crack the sides of the [illegible]."

When the Georgia Legislature meets it purposes making Atlanta my headquarters, and keeping the TIMES au courant of events as they occur.

QUEEN.

TELEGRAMS.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Russia Desirous of Preventing the Expulsion of Greeks from Turkey.

PARIS, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Le Turquie (newspaper) asserts that Russia urges the meeting of the Conference, now that Greece is quiet, with a view to prevent the expulsion of the Greeks from Ottoman territory. It intimates that the representatives of the Porte will leave the Conference if this point is introduced for discussion, and warns Russia of the danger of another Crimean war.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

A mixed Commission, with FOSSATI as President, has been appointed to adjudicate the case of the Greek steamer Ergeia.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

It is said that Greece will introduce the claims of the Cretans into the Conference about to meet in Paris, and will demand that they be allowed to declare who shall be their rulers by a plebiscitum.

SPAIN.

Malaga Insurgents Punished for Firing upon Persons Protected by the American Flag.

MADRID, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Four of the insurgents at Malaga fired into a party of refugees while under the protection of the American flag. The General in command at Malaga had the offenders arrested and punished, and has since communicated with the commander of the American squadron in Spanish waters, informing him of the measures taken by the Spanish Government in the case.

A Carlist conspiracy has been discovered in Barcelona, with ramifications in Saragossa and other places. Many persons have been arrested, implicated in the conspiracy, among them CABRELLO, a noted Carlist.

The peasants in Andalusia, pressed by poverty, have organized into plundering parties and are pillaging the rich landholders.

ITALY.

The Recent Tax Disturbances.

FLORENCE, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The country is now perfectly tranquil. The recent disturbances caused by the collection of odious taxes were fomented by the Reactionists.

FRANCE.

Probable Success of the Chinese Embassy.

PARIS, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Patrie says that the sympathy in France with the objects of the Chinese Embassy is so great that Mr. BURLINGAME is as sure of success here as in England.

PERSIA.

Violent Shocks of an Earthquake.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Telegraphic reports have been received from Alexandria of an earthquake at and in the neighborhood of Tabreez, (a Persian city of about 60,000 people,) on Sunday last. Though the shocks were described as very violent, no serious disaster or loss of life is so far known to have been caused by the phenomenon.

CUBA.

Departure of Ex-Captain-General Lersundi—The Policy of his Successor—Another Fight Reported.

HAVANA, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Ex-Captain-General LERSUNDI and Admiral CRIZOT sailed to-day for Spain. The steamer on which they embarked was accompanied some distance outside the Morro by tugs and small boats containing the friends of the departing Captain-General. His return to Spain is regretted by a large number of our citizens. This morning Gen. LERSUNDI, previous to his embarkation, paid a visit to Admiral HOFF on board his flagship the Coubacoa. He was received with the usual ceremonies. This is the first instance known here of of a Captain-General going on board of a foreign man-of-war.

The inaugural proclamation of Capt.-Gen. DULCE is awaited with much anxiety by Spaniards and Cubans, both parties being in the dark in regard to his future policy. The Cubans express the opinion that the revolutionists at Bayamo will refuse to listen to any propositions for a compromise; and the Spaniards are convinced that the troops now in the island, reinforced by those on the way hither from Spain, will speedily put an end to the revolution.

A report is in circulation that the revolutionary Generals, SANCHEZ-BRAVO and LOPEZ, had a battle on the 22d, ult., with Col. LOMOS, on the Salso River, and defeated him, capturing two flags and forty-two prisoners. The insurgents acknowledge a loss of sixteen killed and thirty-six wounded. This news comes solely from rebel sources, and is flatly contradicted by the official dispatches received by the Government here.

Gen. DULCE to-day gave orders that the most ample latitude be allowed by the Government censorship for the publication and forwarding of telegraphic news. Other important concessions, enlarging the liberty of the Press, are expected to follow.

It is reported that the Liberal journal El Pais, which suspended a short time ago, will resume publication in a few days.

The United States steamer Gettysburg arrived yesterday, and was ordered by Admiral HOFF to sail for Nuevitas, to protect the interests of American residents.

The cable steamer New England arrived yesterday. She has not yet succeeded in picking up the lost cable.

The sugar market is very quiet; No. 12 D. S. is quoted at 8½ reals per arroba.

Exchange on London, 17½@18 per cent premium; on the United States, 60 days' sight, in gold, 6@7 per cent. premium.

Arrest of a Canadian Magistrate Charged With Conspiracy.

MONTREAL, Canada, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

JAMES MURKETTRICK, a Magistrate at Deadwell, Eastern Township, has been arrested, with his two sons, on a charge of conspiracy to defraud justice, by a mock trial of one BOGARE, a Paymaster's Clerk of the receiving ship Vermont, who absconds with a large sum of money while the vessel was in the New-York Navy Yard. The Magistrate tried BOGARE, but subsequently set him free. It is alleged that he paid MURKETTRICK $4,500 for releasing him.

Mysterious Death of Two Colored Men in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

This morning information was received at Police headquarters that two colored men, employed at the residence of the French Minister, had been found dead in their beds, Lieut. HOOKER, of the Sanitary Company, and Officer EVANS immediately proceeded to investigate the affair. On entering the room in the northeast corner of the basement the bodies of both the men (SANDY DIGGS, who was employed as a messenger or porter, and LEWIS TAYLOR, employed as a waiter about the house, were found in the condition described. The officers made very careful examination of the room and the articles in it to get a clue; and Detectives CLARKSON and BURLEY, deeming the case worth a close investigation, also took the matter in hand. It was at first thought by some that death was caused by suffocation, gas escaping from the pipe of the furnace by which the house is heated, running through the room near the ceiling, and by others that it was caused by this, and the dampness of the room together, but as there was a hole through the partition into an adjoining room in which there is plenty of air, and it surrounded the bodies that slept in the same room for the past two years without any damage to either of them, there must, of course, be some other cause assigned for these deaths. There was nothing whatever found in the rooms which would lead to the belief that their decease was the result of their own hands, and, indeed, from the characters given them by the other employees of the house and many of their friends, such a thought would be the last entertained. Both parties appeared to be in their usual good health yesterday. A post-mortem examination was made this afternoon. The result will be communicated to the Coroner's jury to-morrow.

MEXICO.

Col. Espinosa Killed in a Duel—Ratification of Treaties.

HAVANA, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

A steamer has arrived from Vera Cruz, and brings the following news:

Col. ESPINOSA was killed in a duel at San Luis. More troops were to be sent from Puebla against the insurgents in the Sierra. The Mexican Congress, by a large majority, has approved the Convention of the 4th of July, made with the United States for the settlement of the claims of the citizens of both countries. The Congress, in secret session, has also approved a treaty with the United States, recognizing the American doctrine of the rights of naturalized citizens.

The Police authorities of the City of Mexico had issued orders restricting the performance of religious ceremonies, which had caused some of the Churches to close their doors. A Police regulation had also been made force prohibiting the sale of liquors after 9 o'clock in the evening. Several journals object to these new orders on the ground that they attack personal liberty, the free exercise of religion and the rights of commerce.

Suicide in Memphis—The Arkansas Militia.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. Tuesday, Jan. 5.

An Italian named ANTONIO PADIRO, after quarreling with his negro mistress, yesterday, and attempting to kill her, shot himself through the head, from which he died to-day.

A Little Rock special dispatch says the municipal election yesterday resulted in the choice of Dr. A. K. HARRMAN (Radical), for MAYOR, by a majority of 796 out of 1,416 votes. Col. CARRINGTON arrived from the South to day with 450 militia, who marched through the city preceded by a band, with Gov. CLAYTON and staff in a barouche. They were reviewed at the State House. They were dressed in every style with red flannel around their hats for a uniform.

The Maine Legislature—Republican Caucus.

AUGUSTA, Me., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

At the caucus of the Republicans of the Maine Senate, this evening, Hon. STEPHEN D. LEMONT, of Somerset, was nominated for President, and THOS. P. CLEAVES, of Oxford, and C. W. LAKE, of Kennebec, were nominated for Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Senate. The Senate stands 29 Republicans to 2 Democrats.

The House caucus was also held this evening. Hon. JOSIAH H. DRUMMOND, of Portland, was unanimously nominated for Speaker, S. J. CHAMBERLAIN for Clerk, and Col. ELIAS SMITH for Assistant Clerk.

The Legislature will convene to-morrow, but the Governor may not be inaugurated until Friday, owing to his illness.

Meeting of Railroad Men in Baltimore—New Arrangements.

BALTIMORE, Md., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Presidents and Superintendents of all the roads in the existing trunk line between New-York and Washington met in Baltimore to-day, the attendance being full and harmonious. A further agreement in the consolidating interests connected with the through passenger operations was adopted, and new measures approved for the further extending of the accommodations of the route and completing new equipment now building. A plan for avoiding the use of horses for the through trains in Baltimore and other arrangements were agreed upon, by which the time of the through trains is expected to be further reduced in the coming season.

The Concord Conductor's Case.

CONCORD, N. H., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The report of the referees in the Concord conductor case of Geo. CROUGH, defendant, was made to the Supreme Court this morning. The judgment against the defendant is for $5,606, and on the questions contingent to the decisions of the Court; $5,509 for not returning the reduced rates of fare taken to the ticket master, as required, and for joint tickets over other roads purchased of ticket agent by defendant, $2,000; also the costs, amounting to $921 50, and the costs of the referee, $1,000, and the costs of Court, to be taxed by the Court, the whole case shows great irregularities and considerable complicity between the Superintendent, GILMORE, and the defendant.

Appointments by the Governor.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

SAMUEL HAND, of the late firm of CAGGIN & HAND was to-day appointed, by the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor and Attorney-General, Reporter of the Court of Appeals, vice JOEL P. TIFFANY, whose term of office has expired.

Ex-Judge Wm. H. LEONARD having declined the appointment of Justice of the Supreme Court of the City of New-York, tendered him by Gov. HOFFMAN, the Governor has appointed JOHN J. FREEDMAN, Esq., to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Judge GARVIN.

The day calendar of the Court of Appeals for Monday, Jan. 6, 1869, is as follows: Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17.

The Kentucky Legislature.

LOUISVILLE, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Legislature assembled at Frankfort to-day. There was a full attendance in the House but no quorum in the Senate. The Governor's message will be presented to-morrow.

MORGAN RESNOR, residing in La Grange was shot and killed this morning. BENJAMIN MACKEY, DANIEL SMITH and W. LOCHEY have been arrested on charge of being the assassins.

The Florida Legislature.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Legislature, which adjourned last November, met yesterday, but transacted no business, no quorum being present in either House. At the regular session to-day there was no quorum of the Senate, but the Lower House organized and reported to Gov. REED as ready to receive any communication from him. An attempt was made to displace Speaker MOCKE, but it proved a failure. Lieut.-Gov. GILMORE occupied the Speaker's chair in the Senate.

The Pennsylvania Legislature.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

No caucus has been held for United States Senator. The general opinion is that the Republicans will nominate JOHN SCOTT, of Huntington County.

Meeting of the Nevada Legislature.

SAN FRANCISCO, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Legislature of Nevada met at Carson yesterday, and organized by the election of T. D. MARWIN, of Ormsby County, President of the Senate, and D. O. ACKERSON, of Story County, Speaker of the House.

Meeting of the Ohio Legislature.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Ohio Legislature met to-day. A quorum was present in both Houses.

Disbandment of Virginia Militia—Removal of Court Officers.

RICHMOND, Va., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Gen. STONEMAN has issued an order disbanding the Public Guard, a company of about one hundred State soldiers which has been doing guard duty at the State Prison and public buildings. The Commanding-General is silently clearing the Courts of officers disqualified under the Fourteenth Amendment. The removals are not furnished the Press.

The Ogeechee Troubles in Georgia.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Ogeechee troubles remain unchanged. The military, with the Sheriff, go down to-morrow morning. Two more negroes came into the city and surrendered to the military.

Sentence of a Murderer in Connecticut.

NEW-HAVEN, Conn., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

STEPHEN ARBOUT, indicted for the murder of A. M. BROWN, in West Haven, last September, was to-day found guilty of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to State Prison for life.

BOSTON.

The Women Sources—Proposed Monster Musical Festival to Commemorate the Return of Peace—The Programme—Who have been Invited.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

BOSTON, Tuesday, Jan. 5, 1869.

Public curiosity here, and indeed in distant places, has been greatly excited by the mysterious and vague statements that have been made in the daily and weekly papers of the city, from time to time, during the past fortnight or so, regarding a forthcoming "grand and magnificent affair." From enterprising out-of-the-city papers, whose correspondents, unlike the unfortunate members of the Boston Press, have not been sworn to profound secrecy by the proprietors of the enterprise, the people have learned that the "affair" is to be a monster musical festival, that it is to come off some time in June, that it is to be conducted on a truly gigantic scale, and that it is to far outshine by its brilliancy and grandeur any and all like festivals that have ever been held in this or any other country in the world. This, however is all that has been learned, and is considered exceedingly unsatisfactory. For the knowledge has but sharpened the curiosity of the people, and increased their thirst for the particulars. To-morrow morning, if I mistake not, they will have them; for then, according to the agreement between the newspaper men and the projectors, the seal will be removed from the mouths of the former, their tongues will be loosened, their pens will be given full swing, and they will be allowed to write and to print what they please and all they please concerning the "affair."

As I have managed, no matter how, to learn the whole story in advance of the public, and, as I am not in the ring of unfortunate knowing ones sworn to secrecy, I hasten to tell it to the TIMES. In the first place, then, the "affair" is to be called "the Mammoth Musical Jubilee," and is to commemorate the return of peace. It is to be given about the middle of June, and will occupy nearly if not quite a week. For its accommodation a building is to be put up on the sacred (to Bostonians, at least) Boston common, spacious enough to accommodate fifty thousand auditors, whereof ten thousand, and an orchestra of one thousand strong. I am enabled to give an idea of the programme, it having already been partially arranged. The school children of the city—who, it must have long ago been noticed, are never left out in any Boston movement—are to play a chorus of twenty thousand or so, will begin the great concert by singing "Hail Columbia," accompanied by the orchestra of ten thousand, and, moreover, by the ringing of bells, firing of cannon, etc., by electricity, from the conductor desk. This, if successful, cannot fail to be a brilliant opening tableau. One day is to be devoted to oratorio choruses, such as "The Heavens are Telling," HAYDN; "See, the Conquering Hero Comes," HANDEL; "Hallelujah," HANDEL; "Thanks be to God," MENDELSSOHN. It is also proposed to produce the ninth symphony, popularly known as the choral symphony of BEETHOVEN. This is considered the greatest undertaking of all. The remainder day is to be given up to the production of the works which it is expected will be contributed by the living musicians of note. There will be much patriotic singing, and a good deal of instrumental music. The entire programme will be given out soon.

I understand that all the great people of the city and the State, municipal as well as musical, encourage the enterprise. Singers for the chorus and players are to be invited from all parts of the United States, and an agent is to be at once sent to Europe to request the presence of all the great living composers—AUBER, WAGNER, VERDI, etc., and to induce each of them to contribute a piece for the show. Then, in order to add additional brilliancy to the occasion, the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, the Governor of each and every State in the Union, every officer of the army and navy of any sort of note, and distinguished people generally in America and, too, beyond the borders, are to receive personal invitations to be present. Boston people are expected to show off their boasted hospitality, and entertain quite royally the strangers that may come within her gates during the jubilee season.

Now, those charged with perfecting the arrangements in the matter, I know, have gone to work the right way. A guarantee fund of $150,000 is to be subscribed, and there is to be plenty of money to carry the work out as it should be carried out. I understand from the very best authority that the principal hotels have already subscribed $ 5,000 each, and many of them, who have been consulted regarding the enterprise, have subscribed sums varying from $1,000 to $100 each. The price of season tickets, with reserved seats, and admitting three, has been fixed at $100 each.

FOREIGN MARKETS.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 5—11 A. M.

Consols open at 93¾ for both money and the account. United States Five-Twenties steady, quiet and steady at 79¾. The Stock Market generally quiet and steady at noon.

Erie	20¾
Illinois	86¾
Atlantic and Great Western	34¾

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Jan. 5—11:30 A. M.

COTTON—The market opens buoyant.

Middling Uplands	12d. @11¾d.
Middling Orleans	11¾d. @11¾d.

The sales of the day are estimated at 12,000 bales.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 5—11:30 A. M.

Turpentine firm at 28s. 6d. ⅌ cwt.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 5—4:30 P. M.

Consols for money, 93¾; for account, 93¾. Stocks quiet. Illinois 86.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Jan. 5—4:30 P. M.

COTTON—The market is active, and prices have advanced a fraction.

Middling Uplands	11¾d.
Middling Orleans	11¾d.

The sales of the day, it is now thought, will foot up 15,000 bales.

PROVISIONS—Pork firm. Bacon, fin. 46. ⅌ cwt. for Cumberland Cut. Lard, firm, ⅌ cwt.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Turpentine, fin. ⅌ cwt.

HAVRE, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

COTTON—Two Ordinaries, and the spot, quiet at 125f. ⅌ cwt. Low Middlings, afloat, dull at 127f.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Jan. 5—4:30 P. M.

COTTON—The market continues active.

TRADE REPORT—The market for yarns and fabrics at Manchester is quiet and firm.

BREADSTUFFS—Flour firmer at 30s. ⅌ bbl. for Western Canal. Oats, 3s. 6d. ⅌ bushel. California Wheat, 10s. 10d. @11s. 1d. Red Western, 10s. 9d. @11s. 0d. Corn, 33s. 3d. ⅌ quarter. Mixed Western, 34s. 6d. @35s. 3d.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 5—4:30 P. M.

Consols closed at 93¾ for money, and 93¾ for the account. American Securities closed at the following quotations:

United States Five-Twenties Bonds	79¾
Erie Railway Shares	20¾
Illinois Central	86¾

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Jan. 5—4:30 P. M.

COTTON—The market closed firm at the following quotations:

Middling Uplands on spot	11¾d.
Middling Uplands to arrive	11¾d. @11¾d.
Middling Orleans	11¾d.

The sales of the day foot up 15,000 bales.

BREADSTUFFS AND PROVISIONS—The markets closed unchanged in tone and quotations.

PETROLEUM—Refined Rose has advanced to 2s. 1d. ⅌ Imperial gallon, and 1s. 10d. ⅌ Imperial gallon for Russian. Other articles unchanged.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 5—4:30 P. M.

Spirits Turpentine, 28s. 6d. Rosin, Yellow, 4fs. 3d. ⅌ cwt. Sugar, Cuba and Linseeds unchanged.

ANTWERP, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Petroleum unchanged; Standard, White, 49f.

HAVRE, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

COTTON—Opened steady at the late advance, and closed quiet at the following quotations:

Fair Orleans	128f.
Fair Upland	127f.
Middling Orleans	125f.
Middling Upland	124f.
Low Middling Orleans	123f.
Low Middling Upland	122f.

The sales of the week are estimated at 50,000 bales, including 8,000 to speculators and for export, and 2,000 to the trade.

PARIS, Tuesday, Jan. 5—Evening.

Cotton market has been active for Free Ordinaries, on the spot, and Low Middlings, to arrive, are firm.

DOMESTIC MARKETS.

CHICAGO, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Exchange on New-York firm at unchanged rates. PROVS firm and in improved demand; Low and good Morning Extra, $3 80@$3 90. WHEAT [illegible] and $1 17½@$1 19½ in the afternoon [illegible] No. 2 Spring, $1 17½@$1 19½; No. 3 do. [illegible] No. 2 Red-Winter, $1 20@$1 21; No. 3 do. [illegible] CORN [illegible] active; business chiefly speculative [illegible] at an advance of 1c.; sales at 68c. [illegible] quiet; sales of No. 1 at $1 16; No. 2 [illegible] and weak; sales at $1 04; on buyers, WHEAT dull but firm at 90c@92c. PROVISIONS moderately active. Mess PORK, $20 00; cash from slaughtering; bags, $20 25. Long Cleared bogs; $20 25 cash for last half of January; $20 25 February and March. LARD sold at 13½c.; seller February, buyer April; Prime Steam, 12½c. Cured Meats dull; Clear Shoulders, 11½c. Cured Rough Sides, 12½c. Loose Hogged Shoulders and in good demand for packing and shipping at $11 50@$11 75. BULK MEATS—Loose Hogs dull and easier. Common to Good Mess Pork Hogs, $9 [illegible]@$9 [illegible]. BEEF CATTLE active; Cows and light Steers, $4 [illegible]@$6 [illegible]; good shipping Steers, $7@$7 [illegible]. RECEIPTS—[illegible] bbls. Flour, 3,000 bushels Wheat, 1,000 bushels Corn, 15,000 bushels Oats, 4,000 bushels Barley, 4,000 bushels Rye, 1,000 bushels Beans, 1,000 bushels Clover Seed, 1,000 bbls. Pork, 1,000 bbls. Beef, 1,000 bbls. Lard, 1,000 bbls. Meats, 1,000 bbls. Whiskey, 1,000 bbls. Wool, 1,000 bbls. Tobacco, 1,000 bbls. Hops, 1,000 bbls. Beans, 1,000 bbls. Potatoes, 1,000 bbls. Dried Fruit, 1,000 bbls. Eggs, 1,000 bbls. Butter, 1,000 bbls. Cheese, 1,000 bbls. Ale, 1,000 bbls. Green Hogs, 1,000 head Cattle, 1,000 head Sheep, 1,000 head Horses, 1,000 head Hides, 1,000 lbs. Leather, 1,000 lbs. Pork, 1,000 lbs. Meats, 1,000 lbs. Lard, 1,000 lbs. Tobacco, 1,000 lbs. Wool, 1,000 lbs. Sugar, 1,000 lbs. Coffee, 1,000 lbs. Copper, 1,000 lbs. Iron, 1,000 lbs. Lead, 1,000 lbs. Tallow, 1,000 lbs. Wax, 1,000 lbs. Peltries, 1,000 lbs. Feathers, 1,000 lbs. Dried Fruit, 1,000 lbs. Wool, 1,000 lbs. Cotton, 1,000 lbs. Rice, 1,000 lbs. Tobacco, 1,000 lbs. Hemp, 1,000 lbs. Flax, 1,000 lbs. Hops, 1,000 lbs. Beans, 1,000 lbs. Potatoes, 1,000 lbs. Dried Fruit, 1,000 lbs. Eggs, 1,000 lbs. Butter, 1,000 lbs. Cheese, 1,000 lbs. Ale, 1,000 lbs. Green Hogs, 1,000 head Cattle, 1,000 head Sheep, 1,000 head Horses, 1,000 head Hides, 1,000 lbs. Leather, 1,000 lbs. Pork, 1,000 lbs. Meats, 1,000 lbs. Lard, 1,000 lbs. Tobacco, 1,000 lbs. Wool, 1,000 lbs. Sugar, 1,000 lbs. Coffee, 1,000 lbs. Copper, 1,000 lbs. Iron, 1,000 lbs. Lead, 1,000 lbs. Tallow, 1,000 lbs. Wax, 1,000 lbs. Peltries, 1,000 lbs. Feathers, 1,000 lbs. Dried Fruit, 1,000 lbs. Wool, 1,000 lbs. Cotton, 1,000 lbs. Rice, 1,000 lbs. Tobacco, 1,000 lbs. Hemp, 1,000 lbs. Flax, 1,000 lbs. Hops, 1,000 lbs. Beans, 1,000 lbs. Potatoes, 1,000 lbs. Dried Fruit, 1,000 lbs. Eggs, 1,000 lbs. Butter, 1,000 lbs. Cheese, 1,000 lbs. Ale, 1,000 lbs. Green Hogs, 1,000 head Cattle, 1,000 head Sheep, 1,000 head Horses, 1,000 head Hides, 1,000 lbs. Leather, 1,000 lbs. Pork, 1,000 lbs. Meats, 1,000 lbs. Lard, 1,000 lbs. Tobacco, 1,000 lbs. Wool, 1,000 lbs. Sugar, 1,000 lbs. Coffee, 1,000 lbs. Copper, 1,000 lbs. Iron, 1,000 lbs. Lead, 1,000 lbs. Tallow, 1,000 lbs. Wax, 1,000 lbs. Peltries, 1,000 lbs. Feathers, 1,000 lbs. Dried Fruit, 1,000 lbs. Wool, 1,000 lbs. Cotton, 1,000 lbs. Rice, 1,000 lbs. Tobacco, 1,000 lbs. Hemp, 1,000 lbs. Flax, 1,000 lbs. Hops, 1,000 lbs. Beans, 1,000 lbs. Potatoes, 1,000 lbs. Dried Fruit, 1,000 lbs. Eggs, 1,000 lbs. But

FINANCIAL.

BANKING HOUSE OF

HENRY CLEWS & Co.

NO. 32 WALL-ST.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DAILY BALANCES OF CURRENCY OR GOLD.

Parties depositing with us can check at sight, in same manner as with National Banks.

Advances made on approved collaterals.

Certificates of deposit issued bearing interest.

Collections made everywhere and loans negotiated.

We buy and sell at current market rate all issues of GOVERNMENT BONDS, and execute orders for the purchase and sale of GOLD and all fluctuating securities for the usual commission.

BANKING HOUSE OF

Geo. Opdyke & Co.

25 Nassau St.

CORNER OF CEDAR ST.

DEPOSITS received subject to check at sight, and interest allowed on the sale of FOUR per cent. per annum.

CERTIFICATES OF DEPOSIT issued, bearing interest, payable on demand, or after fixed dates.

COLLECTIONS made on all points in the United States, Canada and Europe. Dividends and Coupons also collected, and all business promptly accounted for.

ORDERS promptly executed for the purchase and sale of Gold; also, Government and other Securities.

LOANS negotiated.

Collections.

Howes & Macy, Bankers,

(The same as an Incorporated Bank.)

NO. 30 WALL-ST., NEW-YORK,

Have unusual facilities for making Collections on any part of the Union or Canada, with immediate Returns, at the very Lowest Current Rates.

4 PER CENT. ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS

JOHNSON & DAY,

BANKERS AND BROKERS,

No. 52 Broadway and No. 1 New-st., New-York,

Buy and sell on commission all Government securities, railroad stocks, bonds and all other securities dealt in at the Board of Brokers; make advances on approved securities.

ALFRED JOHNSON.

BOWNES BROTHERS & CO.,

BANKERS AND COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS,

NO. 59 WALL-ST.,

New-York.

No. 76 State-st., Boston.

Make advances on approved securities and cash consignments; drafts on the United States or England bought and sold. Circular credits issued.

Letters for Americans in Europe addressed to our care will be forwarded or delivered.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO.,

NO. 59 WALL-ST.,

ISSUE COMMERCIAL AND TRAVELLERS' CREDITS FOR USE IN THIS COUNTRY AND ABROAD.

AUGUST BELMONT & CO.,

Issue Letters of Credit for Travellers' use, on the HOUSES, BANKERS, MERCHANTS and Bankers in Paris, London, Frankfort-on-the-Main, Vienna, and their correspondents in all principal cities of Europe; also, make Telegraphic transfers of money in CALIFORNIA AND EUROPE.

MIDLAND RAILROAD.

NOTICE.

The coupons due Jan. 1, 1860, on the bonds of the towns and citizens, issued in aid of the construction of the Warwick and Orange Midland Railroad, will be paid on presentation at the American Exchange National Bank, in the City of New-York, on and after the 3d proximo.

W. M. CONKEY.

Treasurer New-York and Orange Midland Railroad.

Oswego, Nov. 28, 1859.

QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE WEST NATIONAL BANK of the City of New-York, on the morning of the first Monday of January, 1860.

RESOURCES.
Bills discounted	$2,194,197 72
Demand loans	2,136,977 12—$4,331,174 85
Liabilities of Directors	34,372 50
Overdrafts	4,259 00
Specie	119,911 79
Due from banks	305,112 31
United States bonds	2,400,000 00
Cash on hand, viz.:
Specie	145,708 50
National currency	37,000 00
Legal tenders	2,974,425 00
Checks, &c.	3,156,133 50—6,312,134 00
Total	$17,494,961 25
LIABILITIES.
Capital stock	$2,000,000 00
Surplus and profits	341,220 75
Circulation	1,354,000 00
Deposits:
Individual	6,136,789 00
United States	32,756 00
Banks	7,631,295 50—13,802,840 50
Dividends unpaid	196,770 00
Total	$17,494,961 25

W. H. SANFORD, Cashier.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, this 4th day of January, 1860.

CHARLES E. BOGERT, Notary Public, City and County of New-York.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, CITY OF NEW-YORK, Dec. 28, 1859.

INTEREST ON CITY STOCKS.—THE INTEREST on the stocks and bonds of the Corporation of the City of New-York, due on the 1st of January, 1860, will be paid on that day by PETER B. SWEENEY, Chamberlain of the City, at his office in the New Court-House.

The transfer books will be closed Tuesday, Jan. 3, 1860.

RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, Comptroller.

NATIONAL BROADWAY BANK, NEW-YORK, Dec. 21, 1859.

ELECTION.—THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR Directors of this bank will be held at the banking-house No. 257 Broadway, on TUESDAY, the 10th day of January ensuing, between the hours of 12 M. and 1 P.M.

J. I. EVERITT, Cashier.

MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, Dec. 27, 1859.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIRECTORS of this Bank will be held at the Banking-house, on TUESDAY, 10th day of January next, between the hours of 12 M. and 1 P. M.

R. J. OAKLEY, Cashier.

THE NATIONAL PARK BANK OF NEW-YORK, Dec. 21, 1859.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIRECTORS of this Bank will be held at the banking-house No. 214 and 216 Broadway, on TUESDAY, Jan. 12, 1860, from 12 to 1 o'clock.

J. L. WORTH, Cashier.

THE GRATHAM NATIONAL BANK, NEW-YORK, Dec. 21, 1859.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR Directors of this Bank will be held at the Banking-room on TUESDAY, 10th of January next, between the hours of 12 M. and 1 P. M.

O. H. SCHREINER, Cashier.

THE BANK OF NEW-YORK, NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATION, NEW-YORK, Dec. 21, 1859.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIRECTORS of this Bank will be held at the banking-room on TUESDAY, the 10th day of January, 1860. Polls open from 12 M. to 1 P. M.

W. D. SHEPARD, Cashier.

TENTH NATIONAL BANK, No. 52 BROAD-ST., CORNER EXCHANGE-PLACE, NEW-YORK, Dec. 21, 1859.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIRECTORS of this Bank for the ensuing year will be held at the Banking-house, No. 52 Broad-st., corner Exchange-place, on TUESDAY, Jan. 12, 1860, between the hours of 12 M. and 1 o'clock P. M.

J. H. STOUT, Cashier.

OFFICE OF THE BIGELOW BLUE-STONE CO., MALDEN, Ulster County, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1860.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION OF TRUSTEES of this Company for the ensuing year, the next annual election, will be held at the office of the Company, on MONDAY, the 11th day of January next. Polls open at 2 and close at 4 P. M.

H. BOGARDUS, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE METROPOLITAN GAS LIGHT CO., CORNER OF BROADWAY AND 48-ST., NEW-YORK, Dec. 28, 1859.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STOCKholders of this Company for the election of Directors, will be held at the office of the Company, on MONDAY, Jan. 16, 1860, at 12 M., and closed at 1 P. M.

WM. MIELEBRAM, Secretary.

SHELDES AND COLUMBIAN COPPER COMPANY OF MICHIGAN.—A special meeting of the stockholders of the Company will be held at the office, No. 2 William-st., New-York, on MONDAY, the 1st day of February, 1860, at 12 o'clock M., to vote upon the question of changing the name of the Company and of levying further assessments. By order of the Directors.

E. J. EDWARDS, Secretary.

STATE OF MISSOURI INTEREST.—NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE in New-York, Dec. 27, 1859.—The coupons due 1st of January next from bonds issued to or guaranteed by the State of Missouri (except those issued to the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad) will be paid on presentation at this bank after that date.

H. P. VAIL, Cashier.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE, NEW-YORK, Dec. 21, 1859.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIRECTORS of this bank will be held at the banking-house, No. 409 Broadway, on TUESDAY, Jan. 12, 1860, between the hours of 12 M. and 1 P. M.

CHAS. HUDSON, Cashier.

NATIONAL SHOE AND LEATHER BANK, NEW-YORK, Dec. 21, 1859.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIRECTORS of this Bank will be held at the banking-house, Broadway and Chambers-st., on TUESDAY, Jan. 12, 1860, between the hours of 12 M. and 1 P. M.

J. M. CRANE, Cashier.

OFFICE OF THE EAGLE FIRE COMPANY, NEW-YORK, Dec. 28, 1859.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIRECTORS of this Company and for Inspectors will be held at the Company's office, No. 71 Wall-st., on TUESDAY, Jan. 10, 1860, commencing at 12 o'clock M., and closing at 1 o'clock P. M.

J. CLINTON, Secretary.

DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN R. R. CO., GENERAL OFFICE, NO. 52 EXCHANGE-PLACE, NEW-YORK, Jan. 3, 1860.

THE TRANSFER BOOKS OF THIS Company will be closed from this date until the morning of Wednesday, the 25th inst., by order of the Board of Managers.

A. J. ODELL, Treasurer.

THE STOCKHOLDERS OF THE LAWRENCE OIL AND MINING COMPANY are hereby notified that an election of Trustees will be held on WEDNESDAY, Jan. 25, 1860, between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock, at the office of the Company.

H. D. PECK, Secretary.

NOTICE.—THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR Directors of the Smithtown and Parmelia Oil Company will be held at the office of the Company, 346 Broad-st., in the City of New-York, on MONDAY, Jan. 16, 1860, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock P. M. By order,

WM. H. HOLLISTER, Secretary.

FINANCIAL.

VERMILYE & CO.,

BANKERS,

REMOVED TO

NOS. 16 AND 18 NASSAU-ST.

DEALERS IN ALL ISSUES OF GOVERNMENT SECURITIES AND IN GOLD AND GOLD COUPONS.

CLOSING PRICES.

	New-York, Jan. 4, 1860—3 P. M.
	Sat.	Mon.		Sat.	Mon.
Registered, 1881	109¾	109¾	5-20 Coupon, '62	108¾	107
Coupon, 1881	111	111½	5-20 Coupon, '64	107½	107¾
5-20 Reg., 1865	108	108	10-40 Registered
5-20 Coupon, '65	111	111½	10-40 Coupon	112¾	113¾
5-20 Coupon, '67	107¾	107¾	Gold	124¾	124¾
5-20 Coupon, '68	108	108¾	U. S. Cur. Fcd.	99	99¾
5-20 Coupon, '58
Jan. and July	106¾	106¾

BUY AND SELL ON COMMISSION,

RAILWAY STOCKS, BONDS AND GOLD,

MAKING LIBERAL ADVANCES.

INTEREST ON DEPOSITS.

BANKING HOUSE OF

JAY COOKE & CO.

NO. 114 WALL-ST.,

CORNER OF NASSAU-ST., NEW-YORK.

We buy and sell at the most liberal current prices, and keep on hand a full stock of

GOVERNMENT BONDS OF ALL ISSUES.

And execute orders for purchase and sale of

STOCKS, BONDS AND GOLD.

We have added to our office a Retail Department for the accommodation of the public desiring to invest money in and exchange of Government Securities, the purchase of GOLD and INTEREST COUPONS, and the sale of INTERNAL REVENUE STAMPS.

JAY COOKE & CO.

FIRST MORTGAGE TEN-YEAR BONDS.

PATERSON AND NEWARK RAILROAD CO.

INTEREST SEVEN PER CENT., PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY. PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST GUARANTEED BY THE ERIE RAILWAY COMPANY.

FOR SALE BY

HOWE & BELDEN,

BANKERS,

No. 32 Wall-st., cor. No. 1 Nassau.

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS OF THE CALIFORNIA PACIFIC RAILROAD.

PRINCIPAL AND SEVEN PER CENT. INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD AT THE NATIONAL PARK BANK, NEW-YORK.

COUPONS PAID JANUARY AND JULY.

The Road runs from the Navigable Water of the Bay of San Francisco to Sacramento, and fully equipped with first-class rolling stock. The net receipts are more than three times the interest on the whole issue of bonds. We have a limited amount for sale at par and accrued interest, in currency.

TURNER BROTHERS, Bankers,

No. 14 Nassau-st.

ST. LOUIS AND IRON MT. R. R. BONDS.

The Company will sell about the First May gold Bonds during each of the months of January, February and March, which will close the entire issue. Price for January, 1860, 105 and accrued interest. The proceeds to be used for February, the price will be advanced 2½ per cent.

R. G. MARQUARD, Vice-President.

No. 6 Wall-st.

QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE SECOND NATIONAL BANK in the City of New-York, in the State of New-York, on the morning of the first Monday of January, 1860:

RESOURCES.
Loans and discounts	$652,187 61
Commercial paper	561,597 11
Demand loans on United States bonds	325,000 00
Demand loans on other stocks and securities	8,000 00
Real estate, (see section 24)
Other suspended and overdue paper
Indebtedness of Directors
Hanover Fire Insurance Company	$22,000 00
United States bonds to secure circulation	250,000 00
Due from other National Banks	31,269 17
Cash items, (including stamps)	15,161 42
Exchanges for Clearing-House	42,016 34
Bills of other National Banks	12,002 00
Fractional currency, (including nickels)	4,120 88
Specie	2,000 00
Three per cent. certificates	30,000 00
Total	$1,710,372 42
LIABILITIES.
Capital stock paid in	$300,000 00
Surplus fund	$170,000 00
Interest	25 00
Profit and loss	17,022 57—187,022 57
Circulating notes received from Comptroller	225,000 00
Less amount on hand
Circulating notes outstanding	225,000 00
Individual deposits	$970,251 42
Certified checks	12,423 31
Cashier's checks outstanding	16,675 27—979,351 00
United States deposits
Due to National Banks	19,499 21
Total	$1,710,372 42

I, CHARLES F. HARTT, Cashier of the Second National Bank, New-York, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

CHARLES F. HARTT, Cashier.

State of New-York, County of New-York, ss.—Sworn to and subscribed before me, this 4th day of January, 1860.

T. J. CROWDER, Notary Public, City and County of New-York.

QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE, in New-York, on the morning of the first Monday of January, 1860:

RESOURCES.
Loans and discounts	$12,488,272 11
Banking house and lot	400,000 00
United States Bonds deposited with Treasurer of the United States	2,000,000 00
Other United States Securities	240,031 00
New-York State and County Stocks	241,600 00
Due from other Banks	1,346,819 00
Cash items—checks, &c., in exchange	5,021,375 04
Specie	$1,254,160 00
Legal-tender notes	1,116,224 00
United States Certificates of deposit	3,000,000 00—7,170,384 00
National Bank Notes and Fractional Currency	316,022 15
Total	$24,324,913 27
LIABILITIES.
Capital	$10,000,000 00
Surplus	2,000,114 00
Profits	601,848 45
Last dividend just declared	300,000 00—901,848 45
Circulating Notes outstanding	4,500,000 00
Individual deposits	$11,268,227 27
Bank deposits	3,154,848 00
Due Treasurer of United States	122,017 15—14,545,092 42
Dividend payable this day	300,000 00
Former dividends uncollected	12,252 00
Total	$24,324,913 27

I, HENRY P. VAIL, Cashier of the National Bank of Commerce, in New-York, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

H. P. VAIL, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn before me this 4th day of January, 1860.

CHARLES M. ANNIN, Notary Public.

MECHANICS' AND MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK OF TROY.—Notice is hereby given that a vote of the shareholders owning two-thirds of the stock of this Association to go into liquidation was passed on the 1st day of January, 1860, and that this Association is closing up its affairs accordingly.

And the holders of the notes of this Association and other creditors thereof are hereby notified to present such notes and other claims against this Association for payment at the banking-house of said Association in the City of Troy.

Dated TROY, Dec. 31, 1859.

By order of the Board of Directors,

PER SIMS, Cashier.

This Bank has reorganized as a State Institution and will continue business under the same name of the Merchants' and Mechanics' Bank of Troy.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT our safe was broken open on the night of the 23d December, 1859, or the morning of Jan. 1, 1860, at No. 48 Hudson-st., in the City of New-York, and the following, therefrom: Twenty shares Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, No. 16,347, registered in name of Isaac Bonnell; twenty shares Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, No. 16,348, registered in name of James Bonnell; twenty shares Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, No. 16,349, registered in name of Isaac Bonnell. All persons are notified against purchasing or accepting the same, and we request that every dealer be cautioned against receiving the same, and we request that every dealer be cautioned against receiving the same, and we request that every dealer be cautioned against receiving SHIPPING.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO FRANCE.

THE GENERAL TRANSATLANTIC COMPANY'S ROYAL MAIL STEAMSHIPS, BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND HAVRE, CALLING AT BREST.

This splendid steamship, the fourth vessel, for the Company will sail from Pier No. 50, North River, at 10 A.M.

EUROPE.....LEMAIRE.....SATURDAY, Jan. 6
VILLE DE PARIS.....SURMONT.....SATURDAY, Jan. 13
FRANCE.....DUCHESNE.....SATURDAY, Feb. 3
ST. LAURENT.....SOUVERAIN.....SATURDAY, Feb. 10

PRICE OF PASSAGE IN GOLD, (including wines)
TO BREST OR HAVRE
First cabin, $140; second cabin, $80.
TO PARIS.
Including railway ticket, furnished on board.
First cabin, $145; second cabin, $85.
Stewards and stewardesses accompany the steamers.
Medical attendance free of charge.
Passengers booked to or from Southampton (the Continent of Europe by joining the steamer of this line, with the French or English railways and the discomforts of crossing the Channel, besides saving time, expense and exposure.
GEO. MACKENZIE, Agent, No. 58 Broadway.

THE BRITISH AND NORTH AMERICAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMSHIPS, BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL, CALLING AT CORK HARBOR.

RUSSIA leaves.....WEDNESDAY, Jan. 3
ASIA leaves.....WEDNESDAY, Jan. 10
QUEBEC leaves.....WEDNESDAY, Jan. 17
ALPS leaves.....WEDNESDAY, Jan. 24
HIBERNIA leaves.....WEDNESDAY, Feb. 7
BOSTONIAN leaves.....WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14
Cabin Cabin Passage.....$140
Second Cabin Passage.....$80
TO PARIS.
Cabin Cabin Passage.....145
Gold is not accepted until good time.
An experienced surgeon on board.
The owners of these ships will not be accountable for money unless sealed bills of lading among the other are sealed and signed therefor.
For freight or passage apply to
E. CUNARD, No. 4 Prince-street, New-York.

STEAM TO GLASGOW AND DERRY.
THE ANCHOR LINE.
Favorite Clyde-built Steamers are intended to sail
EVERY SATURDAY
From Pier No. 20, North River, at 3 P.M. as follows:
ANGLIA.....Jan. 6 SCHIEDAM.....Feb. 10
HIBERNIA.....Jan. 13 ROTTERDAMER.....Feb. 17
CALEDONIA.....Jan. 20 EUROPA.....Feb. 24
Intermediate or steerage passage at CURRENCY.
Cabins, $75 currency, and $80 currency, $70 and $75.
Steerage, $30 currency, including bedding and utensils.
Prepaid Certificates from $30 upward, payable on demand, at any place in Great Britain and Ireland.
Passengers booked to and from Hamburg, Havre, Rotterdam, Antwerp, &c., at very low rates.
Drafts issued payable at any bank in Great Britain and Ireland.
For further information apply at the Company's office, No. 7 Bowling-green, New-York.
HENDERSON BROTHERS.

LIVERPOOL AND GREAT WESTERN STEAM COMPANY.
FOR LIVERPOOL
From Pier No. 4 North River, WEDNESDAYS.
MINNESOTA.....Jan. 3 SENECA.....Jan. 17
COLORADO.....Jan. 10 KANSAS.....Jan. 24
NEBRASKA.....Jan. 31
MANHATTAN.....Feb. 7
Cabin, $80 and upwards, according to accommodation.
Steerage, $30 currency, including bedding and utensils.
Prepaid Certificates from $30 upward, payable on demand, at any place in Great Britain and Ireland.
Passengers booked to and from Hamburg, Havre, Rotterdam, Antwerp, &c., at very low rates.
Drafts issued payable at any bank in Great Britain and Ireland.
For further information apply at the Company's office, No. 5 Bowling-green, New-York.
HENDERSON BROTHERS.

LIVERPOOL AND GREAT WESTERN STEAM COMPANY.
FOR LIVERPOOL
From Pier No. 4 North River, WEDNESDAYS.
MINNESOTA.....Jan. 3 SENECA.....Jan. 17
COLORADO.....Jan. 10 KANSAS.....Jan. 24
NEBRASKA.....Jan. 31
MANHATTAN.....Feb. 7
Cabin, $80 and upwards, according to accommodation.
Steerage, $30 currency, including bedding and utensils.
Prepaid Certificates from $30 upward, payable on demand, at any place in Great Britain and Ireland.
Passengers booked to and from Hamburg, Havre, Rotterdam, Antwerp, &c., at very low rates.
Drafts issued payable at any bank in Great Britain and Ireland.
For further information apply at the Company's office, No. 5 Bowling-green, New-York.
HENDERSON BROTHERS.

CUNARD LINE OF STEAMERS.
BETWEEN NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL, CALLING AT QUEENSTOWN.
FROM NEW-YORK EVERY THURSDAY.
SIBERIA.....Jan. 11 ETHIOPIA.....Jan. 25
ALEPPO.....Jan. 18 PARTHIA.....Feb. 1
RATES OF PASSAGE FROM NEW-YORK.
Cabin.....$80 Gold.
Steerage.....$30 currency.
Passage to Paris from Liverpool or Queenstown or New-York.
For Freight or Passage, apply at No. 4 Bowling-green.
E. CUNARD.

NATIONAL LINE.
THE STEAMSHIP ENGLAND, THOMPSON, Will leave SATURDAY, Jan. 6, at 12 P.M., from Pier No. 42 North River.
Passage to Liverpool or Queenstown: Cabin, $100; Steerage, $30, currency. Steerage tickets from Liverpool or Queenstown, $35, currency.
Apply at the Company's office, No. 61 Broadway.
J. W. J. HURST, Manager.

PASSAGE TO AND FROM GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, BY STEAMSHIP AND SAILING PACKET, PREPAID CERTIFICATES.
DRAFTS AVAILABLE THROUGHOUT ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND AND WALES.
For particulars apply to
WAFSOTT, BROTHERS & CO.,
No. 37 Broadway, cor. No. 26 Broadway.

FOR LIVERPOOL AND QUEENSTOWN.
Inman Line of mail steamers are appointed to sail as follows:
CITY OF LONDON.....Saturday, Jan. 6 1 P.M.
CITY OF MANCHESTER (via Halifax)
Saturday, Jan. 13 1 P.M.
CITY OF NEW-YORK.....Saturday, Jan. 20 1 P.M.
CITY OF PARIS.....Saturday, Jan. 27 1 P.M.
And one steamer leaving SATURDAY and alternate TUESDAY, over Pier No. 45 North River.
RATES OF PASSAGE.
PASSAGE IN GOLD. PASSAGE IN CURRENCY.
First Cabin.....$100 Steerage.....$30 and $35
To London.....115 To Paris.....$145 and $165
To Paris.....145 To London.....$145 and $165
Intermediate.....$80 Intermediate.....$80
Steerage.....$30 Steerage.....$30
To Liverpool, Londonderry, Glasgow, Queenstown, St. John's, N.F., by Steerage, $30 gold; steerage, $35, currency.
Prepaid tickets are issued for the accommodation of persons wishing to send for their friends.
For freight or passage apply to
WILLIAMS & GUION, No. 11 Wall-st.
For steerage apply to WILLIAMS & GUION, No. 2 Broadway

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

(Continued from Third Page.)

Canal Debt Paying Interest 30th September, 1868.

	Principal.	Annual Interest of.
Under Art. 7 Sec. 2, of the Constitution	$8,320,700 00	$111,588 00
Under Art. 7 Sec. 3, of the Constitution	10,324,100 00	619,196 00
Under Art. 7 Sec. 12, of the Constitution	1,698,000 00	101,100 00
Total	$14,320,800 00	$831,631 00

There are also $10,160 of Canal debt, which sum is past due, and does not now bear interest; this is included in my previous statement of Canal Debt.

The aggregate balance of all the Sinking Funds applicable to the Canal Debt in the Treasury, and temporarily invested on the 30th of September last, $4,097,323 43. These Sinking Funds are pledged for the payment of the interest and the redemption of the principal of the several debts and loans incurred under sections one, two and twelve, of article fifth, of the Constitution, in the construction and enlargement of the canals. The application of the above balance to the reduction of the principal of which these funds have been pledged, and set apart, would reduce the above outstanding indebtedness to the sum of $10,227,676 57, as will more fully appear from the following statement:

	Balance of Sinking Fund applicable to payment of principal.	Debt Xth temporarily applying Sink'g Fd.	Balance of debt after applying Sink'g Fd.
Under Art. 7, Sec. 2, of the Constitution	$8,320,700 00	$8,320,700 00
Under Art. 7, Sec. 3, of the Constitution	10,324,100 00	4,097,323 43	$6,226,776 57
Under Art. 7 Sec. 12, of the Constitution	1,698,000 00	1,698,000 00
Total	$20,342,800 00	$14,116,023 43	$6,226,776 57
Amount of Sinking Fund over Debt			75,192 07
			$6,301,968 64
Deduct the Comptroller has included in the Sinking Fund applicable to the payment of the section of the Canal Debt, and which the Auditor does not include			2,316,058 07
Balance of Sinking Fund over Debt			$3,985,910 57

This amount formed to the Sinking Fund, under section 1, is fully sufficient to pay the balance due on the debt originally incurred for the construction of the canals, and known as the canal debt of 1826. The extinguishment of this debt makes a further annual appropriation of $1,704,000 no longer necessary, and enables the Legislature to apply the surplus revenues to the immediate payment of the general fund debt of the State, under the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of article 7 of the Constitution.

The auditor of the Canal Department reports that he has paid, out of the canal fund, during the year, on account of principal and interest of the debt, $4,854,647 83. The annual appropriation of $1,800,000 now required by section 1, will be sufficient to pay the principal and accruing interest of this debt in less than four years. The debt contracted by virtue of the provision of said section 3, for the enlargement and completion of the canals, amounting, on the 12th of September last, to $10,284,100 matures on an average in less than six years. To supply the sinking fund with the means to pay the interest on and accruing principal of this debt as it falls due, will require an annual appropriation of $6,340,000. Funds have been provided for the payment of all outstanding claims and liabilities against the State, except such as may have arisen during the last year for awards made by the Canal Appraisers for lands appropriated for or completed for public purposes. The amount of business transacted upon the canals, their general condition, management and supervision, compare favorably with any previous season. Their revenues have been nearly half a million in excess of those of 1867, while their current expenses, for care, superintendency and ordinary repairs, have been over $200,000 less than the annual average for the four preceding years.

It affords me great pleasure to congratulate the Legislature and the people of the State upon the fact that the surplus revenues of the canals for the past fiscal years have been sufficient to pay the balance of the canal debt of 1826, satisfy the other requirements of the Constitution, and contribute over $100,000 "to defray the necessary expenses of the Government."

The Erie Canal, by its geographical position and the physical characteristics, has a special and an important relation to the commerce and business not only of our own State, but of the populous and rapidly growing communities of the great Northwest. Connecting the Hudson with the lakes, it is an indispensable link in a chain of water communication, which continues to be of great power and value notwithstanding the improvements in the methods of land transportation which are characteristic of our times. The work is a trust for the people of the State, whose enterprise and capital have created it; but it is to be administered in a spirit of liberality toward those great populations whose growth has been fostered by it, and whose welfare it continues to effect. To maintain it in a condition of efficiency, and to improve it in a practical manner, as the necessities of business may from time to time demand, is our interest as proprietors, and our policy with reference to the commerce of the State and country. To protect it from embarrassment, arising out of improvident expenditures, ill-considered changes in its structure, or charges upon its revenues, growing out of other responsibilities, is an obligation clearly resting upon us. The general plan of its construction and its adaptation to the business for which it was intended, provide a convenient, easy, and an economical means of transportation. The complaints that have arisen, some of which have been made the basis of demands for fundamental changes in the work, have been provoked mainly by failures in the administration.

The most unnecessary, as well as the most mischievous of these failures has been the allowing of the water-way of the canal to become narrow at the bottom, and shallow, by neglect to remove the gradual accumulations of earth, loosened from the sides of the work and the lapse of time. The consequences have been that the flow of water has been obstructed, its supply lessened, especially on the short levels, the movement of the boats retarded, the time of transits lengthened, and the cost of transportation increased. Frequent complaints of a serious character have also arisen from the failure to make provision for prompt repairs for keeping the locks in efficient working order, and for doubling them when necessary. All persons doing business on the canals will agree that these evils have been more than once during the navigation season of 1868 the subject of complaint. In some time prior to the season of 1867, they were so serious as to greatly impair the efficiency of the canals and to create very extensive dissatisfaction among all persons engaged in the business of transportation. I do not propose now to speak at length in regard to what appears to be improvements, or the making of which such surplus revenues of the State may have at its command, should be applied. Upon this subject I respectfully refer you to the able report of the State Engineer, of which I ask your careful consideration. Besides such general improvements as experiences suggest and the demands of commerce require, it is a constant duty, as well as the best economy, to keep the canals at all times in thorough repair, and in the best and most efficient working condition. It is especially important that the water-way be restored to its full dimensions, and even be incidentally and progressively enlarged. The considerations which I have submitted are applicable to all the canals in proportion to the extent of their business.

With respect to the present contract system for repairs to the canals, I beg leave to call your attention specially to the following extract from the report of the State Engineer: "The present system of repairs does proved a great disappointment to its early advocates, and as an experiment, has wholly failed in protecting the interests of the State, and in preserving a uniform standard for our public works. It has proved to be anything but economical to the State, or beneficial to navigation, and its repeal is earnestly desired by all directly interested in the navigations of the canals, and strongly recommended by all the present and previous canal officials." These views of the State Engineer meet with my full approval, and I unite in his recommendation. In connection with his remarks, I desire to enter my earnest protest against the proposition, which in some quarter has met with favor, that it is the duty of the General Government to interest itself in our canals, and ultimately to accept possession of them. Our State has a just pride in its public works, and is quite competent to take care of them. To foster and protect them, to adapt them fully to the public necessities and to the growing demands of the internal commerce of the country, should be the duty of the legislative and Executive departments.

SALT SPRINGS.

The Superintendent of the Onondaga Salt Springs reports the quantity inspected during the last fiscal year at 6,196,614 bushels, being an increase of production over that of the previous fiscal year of 2,616,454. The amount of revenue received from all sources was $88,049 47; total expenditures connected with the superintendency of the Springs was $48,236; the amount of net revenue received by the State being $39,811 47.

STATE PRISONS.

The following facts in regard to the receipts and expenditures of the State Prisons are furnished me by the Comptroller:

EARNINGS.

Sing Sing	$128,963 72
Auburn	128,324 32
Clinton	239,439 56
Total	$496,127 22

PAYMENTS.

Sing Sing	$303,364 36
Auburn	206,520 35
Clinton	450,068 31
Total	$959,313 02

For the number of inmates of the several prisons, and other details, I respectfully refer you to the reports of the Inspectors, which will be duly presented.

Our prisons have not been for many years self-supporting institutions. I am satisfied they are the better managed, as well in respect to finances as discipline. The prison system of this State should be in part, and ought to be, more. Many of these are doubtless due to the fact that the persons appointed to discharge the duties of agents, wardens and keepers are too often selected from political considerations only, without reference to their capacity and qualifications. The present contract system for the employment of the labor of the prisoners is an unwise one, and works very unfavorably the discipline of the prisons, and does not produce satisfactory pecuniary results. The labor of the convicts should be employed entirely by the Prison authorities, and the products of such labor disposed of by them for the benefit of the State. This would remove many existing or threatened difficulties in regard to convict labor, and would be to the advantage to the public.

The law passed some years since, for good behavior in prisons, allowing a certain number of days deduction from the term of imprisonment, by way of commutation for time of imprisonment, in its operation, as I believe, has been beneficial. The Superintendent of Auburn prison, under a system by which the prisoners earn money, recently employed a portion of the earnings to be laid aside for their benefit, to be paid to them on the expiration of their sentences, upon their present good behavior. This plan, I think, is equally just and humane, and would, I think, be equally effective in the reformation of juvenile delinquents. It is a true economy to aid them, and to provide for their instruction and extension.

I respectfully call your attention to the present practice of detaining witnesses in criminal cases, when unable to give security for their appearance at the trial of the accused. They are generally poor, sometimes strangers, temporarily visiting the State, and made the victims of crime, often have families dependent upon them, and are kept in prison upon the claim that public necessity requires their actual presence at the trial. It frequently happens that, while the unfortunate witness is in prison, the alleged criminal is at large on bail. The unnecessary detention of the latter tends to convict the guilty in a civil wrong. I submit whether it cannot be remedied by proper legislation.

INSURANCE.

Inasmuch as the report of the Insurance Department does not date until after the assembling of the Legislature, I am unable to communicate any information in regard to its workings during the past year. I refer you to the report when presented.

BANKS.

The number of financial institutions having relations, more or less intimate, with the Banking Department, on Sept. 30, 1868, was 466.

Of these 343 were banks that had voluntarily taken the final steps to close their banking business under the laws of this State, by providing for the redemption of their circulation within six years. Three others are insolvent, but their circulating notes are amply secured. Forty-eight banking institutions, not above enumerated, have been converted into National Banks, or are otherwise changing their condition, but have not availed themselves of the provisions of the law for finally closing their circulation account.

One trust company and one savings bank are voluntarily winding up their affairs, and one savings bank—the Niagara County—is closing its business, in consequence of insolvency, with liabilities, however, supposed to be less than $4,000.

Forty-seven incorporated banks, whose charters have expired, still have notes outstanding, for the redemption of which they have not made any final deposit.

One hundred and one savings banks, with an aggregate of deposits exceeding $160,000,000; forty-five banks of discount and deposit, including some of the oldest and most substantial and popular institutions in our State; and four trust companies, with large capital and extensive business, still retain relations with this department, unaffected by the financial changes of the last few years. One of these—the 'Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank of Albany—has evinced its confidence in the free banking system of the State of New-York by returning to it from the national system under the provisions of the enabling act of 1867.

One Banking Association, one Trust Company, and two or more Savings Banks have been organized during the year, and other banking associations have filed certificates, but have not taken the final steps to organization precedent to the transaction of business.

The whole amount of circulating notes of all banks in this State, outstanding and charged to their accounts, on the 1st October last, was $2,954,391; of this $1,685,858 were issues of free banks, $1,268,533 were issues of safety fund and incorporated banks. The amount for which securities were held by the Superintendent of the Banking Department was $2,012,768, leaving unsecured $941,623. But this consists, for the most part, of notes of very old banks, and is represented by their account of supposed lost circulation, or of banks that through some form of organization still redeem their notes dollar for dollar, and in some instances in gold.

The amount of circulating notes returned to the Bank Department and destroyed during the last fiscal year was $991,273.

MILITIA.

The Adjutant-General reports that the National Guard of the State is, in its organization and discipline, in a sound and prosperous condition; that it numbers between 26,000 and 30,000 men, and consists of fifty regiments of infantry, three battalions of infantry, one regiment of artillery, three battalions of artillery, three batteries of artillery, three regiments of cavalry, two battalions of cavalry, one squadron of cavalry.

The Legislature of 1868 authorized a reduction of the maximum force from 30,000 to 20,000, and during the year ninety-nine regiments of infantry and two battalions of artillery have been disbanded.

It will be my aim to reduce, as far as possible, the military expenses of the State, without impairing the efficiency of the State National Guard.

EDUCATION.

The condition of colleges and academies of the State will appear from the annual report of the Board of Regents of the University. The opening of the Cornell University, at Ithaca, in October last, was an event of marked interest. The widely-extended influence of this academy in the State entitles them to liberal consideration. A suggestion has been made that the annuity given, more than thirty years ago, from the United States Deposit Fund, might now, with propriety, be increased. The State Library and the State Cabinet of Natural History, both under the control of the Regents of the University, are in a satisfactory condition. The additions to the Library during the past year have been larger than usual. The collection of the State Cabinet has been greatly increased. I recommend the usual appropriations for both.

I submit the following statement in relation to the Common Schools for the year ending Sept. 30, 1868:

FINANCIAL.

Receipts.

Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1867	$1,197,028 70
Apportioned to districts	9,815,166 80
Proceeds of Gospel and school lands	92,243 46
Raised by local action	4,811,146 12
From all other sources	652,846 61	—$16,469,457 66

Expenditures.

For teachers' wages	$8,686,548 42
For libraries	26,926 46
For apparatus	204,262 94
For colored schools	34,765 59
For school-houses, sites, repairs, furniture, &c.	2,166,882 42
For all other incidental expenses	680,046 61
Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1868	1,470,640 61	—$13,469,457 66

Statistical.

Number of children of school age	1,464,494
Number of children attending school some portion of the year	971,613
Number of teachers employed in common schools for twenty-eight weeks or more	16,580
Number of male teachers	6,888
Number of female teachers	21,870
Number of school districts	11,731
Number of school-houses	11,073
Number of volumes in district libraries	1,064,220
Amount of public money to be apportioned during current fiscal year	$9,520,000

Since the school tax was increased from ¾ of a mill to 1¼ mills, and the schools opened to all of proper age without charge, the number of children attending has greatly increased. Four Normal Schools for the training of teachers are in full operation. Two others will be opened early in the present year, and two more early in the year 1870.

It is not necessary for me to urge upon you the importance of doing whatever may be necessary to foster the educational interests of the State.

CHARITIES AND ASYLUMS.

In relation to the operation of the several public charities and asylums in the State, I respectfully refer you to the official report, which will be transmitted.

The Commission of Public Charities was organized under an act of the Legislature of 1867. During the past year nearly all the charitable institutions of the State, both public and private, and also the poor-houses, have been visited under the authority of the Board. Until the creation of this Commission, notwithstanding the large annual contribution of the State to charitable institutions, no provision existed for any systematic supervision or examination of them. The report, which will soon be submitted, will, I doubt not, present many interesting facts and valuable suggestions. I commend all the great charities of the State to the favorable consideration of the Legislature, and recommend such additional legislation as may be necessary to increase the efficiency of the commission.

The title to the Inebriate Asylum, at Binghamton, to, under the operation of the law passed in 1867, vested in the State. No provision was made by that law for the government of the institution, and its management is still in the hands of the trustees under the charter. I submit to the Legislature whether any changes should be made in its administration.

THE NEW CAPITOL.

The Commissioners of the New Capitol, in pursuance of an act of the Legislature, have caused the additional land, deemed requisite for the building, to be taken by appraisement. The jury of appraisal, selected under the proceedings in the Supreme Court, was composed of citizens of the highest respectability, and their awards are unquestioned. Plans for the building have been adopted, and contracts for part of the material for its foundation have been authorized. The site of the building has been fixed upon. I trust there will be no delay in the progress of this work, and recommend such legislation, with reference to it, as may be necessary.

GUARANTEE AND PUBLIC HEALTH.

The past year has been one of more than ordinary exemption from imported disease. This has given time for the completion of the Quarantine Establishment, which, under the supervision of the Commissioners of Quarantine, has been made very complete and effective. The Board of Commissioners have for the past year, been relieved from the immediate care of the Quarantine Establishment, which, under a resolution of the Board, was placed in charge of the Health Officer of the Port of New-York, by the Board of Commissioners of Quarantine. The Board, however, retains the control of the Establishment, and the Health Officer is its agent. The Board of Commissioners of Quarantine have, since the last session of the Legislature, been directed to investigate the management of the State Prisons and the reformation of juvenile delinquents, so far as your commission may deem necessary to aid them, and to provide for their instruction and extension.

10 The New-York Times, Wednesday, January 6, 1869

I respectfully call your attention to the present practice of detaining witnesses in criminal cases, when unable to give security for their appearance at the trial of the accused. They are generally poor, sometimes strangers, temporarily visiting the State, and made the victims of crime, often have families dependent upon them, and are kept in prison upon the claim that public necessity requires their actual presence at the trial. It frequently happens that, while the unfortunate witness is in prison, the alleged criminal is at large on bail. The unnecessary detention of the latter tends to convict the guilty in a civil wrong. I submit whether it cannot be remedied by proper legislation.

INSURANCE.

Inasmuch as the report of the Insurance Department does not date until after the assembling of the Legislature, I am unable to communicate any information in regard to its workings during the past year. I refer you to the report when presented.

BANKS.

The number of financial institutions having relations, more or less intimate, with the Banking Department, on Sept. 30, 1868, was 466.

Of these 343 were banks that had voluntarily taken the final steps to close their banking business under the laws of this State, by providing for the redemption of their circulation within six years. Three others are insolvent, but their circulating notes are amply secured. Forty-eight banking institutions, not above enumerated, have been converted into National Banks, or are otherwise changing their condition, but have not availed themselves of the provisions of the law for finally closing their circulation account.

One trust company and one savings bank are voluntarily winding up their affairs, and one savings bank—the Niagara County—is closing its business, in consequence of insolvency, with liabilities, however, supposed to be less than $4,000.

Forty-seven incorporated banks, whose charters have expired, still have notes outstanding, for the redemption of which they have not made any final deposit.

One hundred and one savings banks, with an aggregate of deposits exceeding $160,000,000; forty-five banks of discount and deposit, including some of the oldest and most substantial and popular institutions in our State; and four trust companies, with large capital and extensive business, still retain relations with this department, unaffected by the financial changes of the last few years. One of these—the 'Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank of Albany—has evinced its confidence in the free banking system of the State of New-York by returning to it from the national system under the provisions of the enabling act of 1867.

One Banking Association, one Trust Company, and two or more Savings Banks have been organized during the year, and other banking associations have filed certificates, but have not taken the final steps to organization precedent to the transaction of business.

The whole amount of circulating notes of all banks in this State, outstanding and charged to their accounts, on the 1st October last, was $2,954,391; of this $1,685,858 were issues of free banks, $1,268,533 were issues of safety fund and incorporated banks. The amount for which securities were held by the Superintendent of the Banking Department was $2,012,768, leaving unsecured $941,623. But this consists, for the most part, of notes of very old banks, and is represented by their account of supposed lost circulation, or of banks that through some form of organization still redeem their notes dollar for dollar, and in some instances in gold.

The amount of circulating notes returned to the Bank Department and destroyed during the last fiscal year was $991,273.

MILITIA.

The Adjutant-General reports that the National Guard of the State is, in its organization and discipline, in a sound and prosperous condition; that it numbers between 26,000 and 30,000 men, and consists of fifty regiments of infantry, three battalions of infantry, one regiment of artillery, three battalions of artillery, three batteries of artillery, three regiments of cavalry, two battalions of cavalry, one squadron of cavalry.

The Legislature of 1868 authorized a reduction of the maximum force from 30,000 to 20,000, and during the year ninety-nine regiments of infantry and two battalions of artillery have been disbanded.

It will be my aim to reduce, as far as possible, the military expenses of the State, without impairing the efficiency of the State National Guard.

EDUCATION.

The condition of colleges and academies of the State will appear from the annual report of the Board of Regents of the University. The opening of the Cornell University, at Ithaca, in October last, was an event of marked interest. The widely-extended influence of this academy in the State entitles them to liberal consideration. A suggestion has been made that the annuity given, more than thirty years ago, from the United States Deposit Fund, might now, with propriety, be increased. The State Library and the State Cabinet of Natural History, both under the control of the Regents of the University, are in a satisfactory condition. The additions to the Library during the past year have been larger than usual. The collection of the State Cabinet has been greatly increased. I recommend the usual appropriations for both.

I submit the following statement in relation to the Common Schools for the year ending Sept. 30, 1868:

FINANCIAL.

Receipts.

Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1867	$1,197,028 70
Apportioned to districts	9,815,166 80
Proceeds of Gospel and school lands	92,243 46
Raised by local action	4,811,146 12
From all other sources	652,846 61	—$16,469,457 66

Expenditures.

For teachers' wages	$8,686,548 42
For libraries	26,926 46
For apparatus	204,262 94
For colored schools	34,765 59
For school-houses, sites, repairs, furniture, &c.	2,166,882 42
For all other incidental expenses	680,046 61
Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1868	1,470,640 61	—$13,469,457 66

Statistical.

Number of children of school age	1,464,494
Number of children attending school some portion of the year	971,613
Number of teachers employed in common schools for twenty-eight weeks or more	16,580
Number of male teachers	6,888
Number of female teachers	21,870
Number of school districts	11,731
Number of school-houses	11,073
Number of volumes in district libraries	1,064,220
Amount of public money to be apportioned during current fiscal year	$9,520,000

Since the school tax was increased from ¾ of a mill to 1¼ mills, and the schools opened to all of proper age without charge, the number of children attending has greatly increased. Four Normal Schools for the training of teachers are in full operation. Two others will be opened early in the present year, and two more early in the year 1870.

It is not necessary for me to urge upon you the importance of doing whatever may be necessary to foster the educational interests of the State.

CHARITIES AND ASYLUMS.

In relation to the operation of the several public charities and asylums in the State, I respectfully refer you to the official report, which will be transmitted.

The Commission of Public Charities was organized under an act of the Legislature of 1867. During the past year nearly all the charitable institutions of the State, both public and private, and also the poor-houses, have been visited under the authority of the Board. Until the creation of this Commission, notwithstanding the large annual contribution of the State to charitable institutions, no provision existed for any systematic supervision or examination of them. The report, which will soon be submitted, will, I doubt not, present many interesting facts and valuable suggestions. I commend all the great charities of the State to the favorable consideration of the Legislature, and recommend such additional legislation as may be necessary to increase the efficiency of the commission.

The title to the Inebriate Asylum, at Binghamton, to, under the operation of the law passed in 1867, vested in the State. No provision was made by that law for the government of the institution, and its management is still in the hands of the trustees under the charter. I submit to the Legislature whether any changes should be made in its administration.

THE NEW CAPITOL.

The Commissioners of the New Capitol, in pursuance of an act of the Legislature, have caused the additional land, deemed requisite for the building, to be taken by appraisement. The jury of appraisal, selected under the proceedings in the Supreme Court, was composed of citizens of the highest respectability, and their awards are unquestioned. Plans for the building have been adopted, and contracts for part of the material for its foundation have been authorized. The site of the building has been fixed upon. I trust there will be no delay in the progress of this work, and recommend such legislation, with reference to it, as may be necessary.

GUARANTEE AND PUBLIC HEALTH.

The past year has been one of more than ordinary exemption from imported disease. This has given time for the completion of the Quarantine Establishment, which, under the supervision of the Commissioners of Quarantine, has been made very complete and effective. The Board of Commissioners have for the past year, been relieved from the immediate care of the Quarantine Establishment, which, under a resolution of the Board, was placed in charge of the Health Officer of the Port of New-York, by the Board of Commissioners of Quarantine. The Board, however, retains the control of the Establishment, and the Health Officer is its agent. The Board of Commissioners of Quarantine have, since the last session of the Legislature, been directed to investigate the management of the State Prisons and the reformation of juvenile delinquents, so far as your commission may deem necessary to aid them, and to provide for their instruction and extension.

I respectfully call your attention to the present practice of detaining witnesses in criminal cases, when unable to give security for their appearance at the trial of the accused. They are generally poor, sometimes strangers, temporarily visiting the State, and made the victims of crime, often have families dependent upon them, and are kept in prison upon the claim that public necessity requires their actual presence at the trial. It frequently happens that, while the unfortunate witness is in prison, the alleged criminal is at large on bail. The unnecessary detention of the latter tends to convict the guilty in a civil wrong. I submit whether it cannot be remedied by proper legislation.

INSURANCE.

Inasmuch as the report of the Insurance Department does not date until after the assembling of the Legislature, I am unable to communicate any information in regard to its workings during the past year. I refer you to the report when presented.

BANKS.

The number of financial institutions having relations, more or less intimate, with the Banking Department, on Sept. 30, 1868, was 466.

Of these 343 were banks that had voluntarily taken the final steps to close their banking business under the laws of this State, by providing for the redemption of their circulation within six years. Three others are insolvent, but their circulating notes are amply secured. Forty-eight banking institutions, not above enumerated, have been converted into National Banks, or are otherwise changing their condition, but have not availed themselves of the provisions of the law for finally closing their circulation account.

One trust company and one savings bank are voluntarily winding up their affairs, and one savings bank—the Niagara County—is closing its business, in consequence of insolvency, with liabilities, however, supposed to be less than $4,000.

Forty-seven incorporated banks, whose charters have expired, still have notes outstanding, for the redemption of which they have not made any final deposit.

One hundred and one savings banks, with an aggregate of deposits exceeding $160,000,000; forty-five banks of discount and deposit, including some of the oldest and most substantial and popular institutions in our State; and four trust companies, with large capital and extensive business, still retain relations with this department, unaffected by the financial changes of the last few years. One of these—the 'Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank of Albany—has evinced its confidence in the free banking system of the State of New-York by returning to it from the national system under the provisions of the enabling act of 1867.

One Banking Association, one Trust Company, and two or more Savings Banks have been organized during the year, and other banking associations have filed certificates, but have not taken the final steps to organization precedent to the transaction of business.

The whole amount of circulating notes of all banks in this State, outstanding and charged to their accounts, on the 1st October last, was $2,954,391; of this $1,685,858 were issues of free banks, $1,268,533 were issues of safety fund and incorporated banks. The amount for which securities were held by the Superintendent of the Banking Department was $2,012,768, leaving unsecured $941,623. But this consists, for the most part, of notes of very old banks, and is represented by their account of supposed lost circulation, or of banks that through some form of organization still redeem their notes dollar for dollar, and in some instances in gold.

The amount of circulating notes returned to the Bank Department and destroyed during the last fiscal year was $991,273.

MILITIA.

The Adjutant-General reports that the National Guard of the State is, in its organization and discipline, in a sound and prosperous condition; that it numbers between 26,000 and 30,000 men, and consists of fifty regiments of infantry, three battalions of infantry, one regiment of artillery, three battalions of artillery, three batteries of artillery, three regiments of cavalry, two battalions of cavalry, one squadron of cavalry.

The Legislature of 1868 authorized a reduction of the maximum force from 30,000 to 20,000, and during the year ninety-nine regiments of infantry and two battalions of artillery have been disbanded.

It will be my aim to reduce, as far as possible, the military expenses of the State, without impairing the efficiency of the State National Guard.

EDUCATION.

The condition of colleges and academies of the State will appear from the annual report of the Board of Regents of the University. The opening of the Cornell University, at Ithaca, in October last, was an event of marked interest. The widely-extended influence of this academy in the State entitles them to liberal consideration. A suggestion has been made that the annuity given, more than thirty years ago, from the United States Deposit Fund, might now, with propriety, be increased. The State Library and the State Cabinet of Natural History, both under the control of the Regents of the University, are in a satisfactory condition. The additions to the Library during the past year have been larger than usual. The collection of the State Cabinet has been greatly increased. I recommend the usual appropriations for both.

I submit the following statement in relation to the Common Schools for the year ending Sept. 30, 1868:

FINANCIAL.

Receipts.

Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1867	$1,197,028 70
Apportioned to districts	9,815,166 80
Proceeds of Gospel and school lands	92,243 46
Raised by local action	4,811,146 12
From all other sources	652,846 61	—$16,469,457 66

Expenditures.

For teachers' wages	$8,686,548 42
For libraries	26,926 46
For apparatus	204,262 94
For colored schools	34,765 59
For school-houses, sites, repairs, furniture, &c.	2,166,882 42
For all other incidental expenses	680,046 61
Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1868	1,470,640 61	—$13,469,457 66

Statistical.

Number of children of school age	1,464,494
Number of children attending school some portion of the year	971,613
Number of teachers employed in common schools for twenty-eight weeks or more	16,580
Number of male teachers	6,888
Number of female teachers	21,870
Number of school districts	11,731
Number of school-houses	11,073
Number of volumes in district libraries	1,064,220
Amount of public money to be apportioned during current fiscal year	$9,520,000

Since the school tax was increased from ¾ of a mill to 1¼ mills, and the schools opened to all of proper age without charge, the number of children attending has greatly increased. Four Normal Schools for the training of teachers are in full operation. Two others will be opened early in the present year, and two more early in the year 1870.

It is not necessary for me to urge upon you the importance of doing whatever may be necessary to foster the educational interests of the State.

CHARITIES AND ASYLUMS.

In relation to the operation of the several public charities and asylums in the State, I respectfully refer you to the official report, which will be transmitted.

The Commission of Public Charities was organized under an act of the Legislature of 1867. During the past year nearly all the charitable institutions of the State, both public and private, and also the poor-houses, have been visited under the authority of the Board. Until the creation of this Commission, notwithstanding the large annual contribution of the State to charitable institutions, no provision existed for any systematic supervision or examination of them. The report, which will soon be submitted, will, I doubt not, present many interesting facts and valuable suggestions. I commend all the great charities of the State to the favorable consideration of the Legislature, and recommend such additional legislation as may be necessary to increase the efficiency of the commission.

The title to the Inebriate Asylum, at Binghamton, to, under the operation of the law passed in 1867, vested in the State. No provision was made by that law for the government of the institution, and its management is still in the hands of the trustees under the charter. I submit to the Legislature whether any changes should be made in its administration.

THE NEW CAPITOL.

The Commissioners of the New Capitol, in pursuance of an act of the Legislature, have caused the additional land, deemed requisite for the building, to be taken by appraisement. The jury of appraisal, selected under the proceedings in the Supreme Court, was composed of citizens of the highest respectability, and their awards are unquestioned. Plans for the building have been adopted, and contracts for part of the material for its foundation have been authorized. The site of the building has been fixed upon. I trust there will be no delay in the progress of this work, and recommend such legislation, with reference to it, as may be necessary.

GUARANTEE AND PUBLIC HEALTH.

The past year has been one of more than ordinary exemption from imported disease. This has given time for the completion of the Quarantine Establishment, which, under the supervision of the Commissioners of Quarantine, has been made very complete and effective. The Board of Commissioners have for the past year, been relieved from the immediate care of the Quarantine Establishment, which, under a resolution of the Board, was placed in charge of the Health Officer of the Port of New-York, by the Board of Commissioners of Quarantine. The Board, however, retains the control of the Establishment, and the Health Officer is its agent. The Board of Commissioners of Quarantine have, since the last session of the Legislature, been directed to investigate the management of the State Prisons and the reformation of juvenile delinquents, so far as your commission may deem necessary to aid them, and to provide for their instruction and extension.

I respectfully call your attention to the present practice of detaining witnesses in criminal cases, when unable to give security for their appearance at the trial of the accused. They are generally poor, sometimes strangers, temporarily visiting the State, and made the victims of crime, often have families dependent upon them, and are kept in prison upon the claim that public necessity requires their actual presence at the trial. It frequently happens that, while the unfortunate witness is in prison, the alleged criminal is at large on bail. The unnecessary detention of the latter tends to convict the guilty in a civil wrong. I submit whether it cannot be remedied by proper legislation.

INSURANCE.

Inasmuch as the report of the Insurance Department does not date until after the assembling of the Legislature, I am unable to communicate any information in regard to its workings during the past year. I refer you to the report when presented.

BANKS.

The number of financial institutions having relations, more or less intimate, with the Banking Department, on Sept. 30, 1868, was 466.

Of these 343 were banks that had voluntarily taken the final steps to close their banking business under the laws of this State, by providing for the redemption of their circulation within six years. Three others are insolvent, but their circulating notes are amply secured. Forty-eight banking institutions, not above enumerated, have been converted into National Banks, or are otherwise changing their condition, but have not availed themselves of the provisions of the law for finally closing their circulation account.

One trust company and one savings bank are voluntarily winding up their affairs, and one savings bank—the Niagara County—is closing its business, in consequence of insolvency, with liabilities, however, supposed to be less than $4,000.

Forty-seven incorporated banks, whose charters have expired, still have notes outstanding, for the redemption of which they have not made any final deposit.

One hundred and one savings banks, with an aggregate of deposits exceeding $160,000,000; forty-five banks of discount and deposit, including some of the oldest and most substantial and popular institutions in our State; and four trust companies, with large capital and extensive business, still retain relations with this department, unaffected by the financial changes of the last few years. One of these—the 'Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank of Albany—has evinced its confidence in the free banking system of the State of New-York by returning to it from the national system under the provisions of the enabling act of 1867.

One Banking Association, one Trust Company, and two or more Savings Banks have been organized during the year, and other banking associations have filed certificates, but have not taken the final steps to organization precedent to the transaction of business.

The whole amount of circulating notes of all banks in this State, outstanding and charged to their accounts, on the 1st October last, was $2,954,391; of this $1,685,858 were issues of free banks, $1,268,533 were issues of safety fund and incorporated banks. The amount for which securities were held by the Superintendent of the Banking Department was $2,012,768, leaving unsecured $941,623. But this consists, for the most part, of notes of very old banks, and is represented by their account of supposed lost circulation, or of banks that through some form of organization still redeem their notes dollar for dollar, and in some instances in gold.

The amount of circulating notes returned to the Bank Department and destroyed during the last fiscal year was $991,273.

MILITIA.

The Adjutant-General reports that the National Guard of the State is, in its organization and discipline, in a sound and prosperous condition; that it numbers between 26,000 and 30,000 men, and consists of fifty regiments of infantry, three battalions of infantry, one regiment of artillery, three battalions of artillery, three batteries of artillery, three regiments of cavalry, two battalions of cavalry, one squadron of cavalry.

The Legislature of 1868 authorized a reduction of the maximum force from 30,000 to 20,000, and during the year ninety-nine regiments of infantry and two battalions of artillery have been disbanded.

It will be my aim to reduce, as far as possible, the military expenses of the State, without impairing the efficiency of the State National Guard.

EDUCATION.

The condition of colleges and academies of the State will appear from the annual report of the Board of Regents of the University. The opening of the Cornell University, at Ithaca, in October last, was an event of marked interest. The widely-extended influence of this academy in the State entitles them to liberal consideration. A suggestion has been made that the annuity given, more than thirty years ago, from the United States Deposit Fund, might now, with propriety, be increased. The State Library and the State Cabinet of Natural History, both under the control of the Regents of the University, are in a satisfactory condition. The additions to the Library during the past year have been larger than usual. The collection of the State Cabinet has been greatly increased. I recommend the usual appropriations for both.

I submit the following statement in relation to the Common Schools for the year ending Sept. 30, 1868:

FINANCIAL.

Receipts.

Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1867	$1,197,028 70
Apportioned to districts	9,815,166 80
Proceeds of Gospel and school lands	92,243 46
Raised by local action	4,811,146 12
From all other sources	652,846 61	—$16,469,457 66

Expenditures.

For teachers' wages	$8,686,548 42
For libraries	26,926 46
For apparatus	204,262 94
For colored schools	34,765 59
For school-houses, sites, repairs, furniture, &c.	2,166,882 42
For all other incidental expenses	680,046 61
Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1868	1,470,640 61	—$13,469,457 66

Statistical.

Number of children of school age	1,464,494
Number of children attending school some portion of the year	971,613
Number of teachers employed in common schools for twenty-eight weeks or more	16,580
Number of male teachers	6,888
Number of female teachers	21,870
Number of school districts	11,731
Number of school-houses	11,073
Number of volumes in district libraries	1,064,220
Amount of public money to be apportioned during current fiscal year	$9,520,000

Since the school tax was increased from ¾ of a mill to 1¼ mills, and the schools opened to all of proper age without charge, the number of children attending has greatly increased. Four Normal Schools for the training of teachers are in full operation. Two others will be opened early in the present year, and two more early in the year 1870.

It is not necessary for me to urge upon you the importance of doing whatever may be necessary to foster the educational interests of the State.

CHARITIES AND ASYLUMS.

In relation to the operation of the several public charities and asylums in the State, I respectfully refer you to the official report, which will be transmitted.

The Commission of Public

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SKETCHES OF IRISH LIFE. By W. STEWART TRENCH, Land Agent in Ireland to Marquis of Lansdowne, Marquis of Hertford and Lord Ormond. With illustrations by his son, F. TRENCH TRENCH. Scribner, Armstrong & Co.

With the blustering of the Fenians during the last few years, and their constant talk about "the wrongs of Ireland," the public in general have become so weary of everything pertaining to the "Green Isle," that it is doubtful whether a work, even of the semi-sensational class, to which Mr. TRENCH's belongs, can attract to itself as many readers as it would freely surely have at a time when the subject of which it treats had not become so worn and threadbare. Yet the question, to the discussion of which it is in some respects an important contribution, never called for more earnest and careful consideration than it does just at this period from those who have to dispose of it, and since the work must have its influence, a running summary of the contents will doubtless have interest for the American reader.

Mr. TRENCH is a relative, how near or how distant he does not inform us, of the distinguished Archbishop of Dublin. If we accept his own estimate of himself, he must be set down as a man of unfleeting nerve, of great physical endurance, unfailing in resource, generous to a fault, prompt in action and always doing just the right thing at the right time. In the preface to the volume, to be sure, the author apologizes for the egotism so apparent in his narrative, but he evidently regards his career as an agent with entire complacency, and as his employers seem to have been satisfied with his course also, in the main, it is perhaps hardly worth while to raise any question as to Mr. TRENCH's possessing all the qualities which he leaves us to infer that he possesses. He first tells us of himself as a pupil at the College of Armagh, where he was at first well "fagged," but, afterward took part in a famous but disgraceful "barring out" demonstration, the highly wrought account of which can hardly be classed among those "realities of Irish life" to which the volume is for the most part devoted. After leaving this College, Mr. TRENCH became an undergraduate in Old Trinity College, Dublin. As he was a younger son he felt that he must do something for himself, and early made up his mind to become an agent. The period of Mr. TRENCH's residence at Dublin was during the days of O'CONNELL's supremacy, and we have some graphic sketches of those troublous times. The Ribbon Code was of course then in full force, and was more terrible than it is now. Tipperary County was, he tells us, "the headquarters of the Confederation, and the Kings County and Queens County, Meath and West Meath, Louth and even Monaghan, where, as 'the gap of the North,' it adjoined the midland counties, were from time to time the scene of its unhallowed operations." It is generally supposed that this Code was terrible only to the landlord, but the tenant quite frequently became its victim. Its main object was to prevent any landlord, under any circumstances whatever, from depriving a tenant of his land. "Fixity of tenure" it was determined to carry out to the death. The second object of the Ribbon Society was to deter, on pain of almost certain death, any tenant from taking land from which any other tenant had been evicted. These principles it carried out with relentless severity, and numerous victims in all ranks of life were sacrificed by it. As the Society felt its power, it very naturally carried things to still greater extremes. One instance is cited in which a respectable farmer was threatened with instant death because he dismissed a careless ploughman, and Mr. TRENCH himself once received a letter, illustrated with a coffin in flaring bloody red, and adorned with death's head and crossbones, threatening the most frightful consequences to himself and family, if he did not continue to employ a profligate carpenter whom he had discharged for idleness and vice. As an illustration of what these Ribbonmen did when they carried their threats into execution, Mr. TRENCH narrates with great particularity the circumstances of the assassination of one Mr. HALL, who was shot dead in an open field in the midst of his laborers. Several gentlemen, well armed, were on the spot almost instantly, but no trace could be discovered of the murderer, and in reply to the suggestion that riders should at once be sent out to overtake the assassin, some one well-informed as to the manner in which the Ribbonmen carried out their plans, suggested that he was then doubtless with the laborers in the field, which actually proved to be the fact. Finally, rewards to the amount of fifteen hundred pounds brought out an informer, and the assassin was arrested and put on trial. Mr. TRENCH writes:

"The story told by the informer was a strange one. He said that a farmer on Mr. HALL's estate had hired him (the informer) for £5 to do the deed, and that the young man (the actual assassin) was to have £2 for accompanying him; that the only motive for murder was that Mr. HALL had prevented the furze from burning some land for conacre, and that it would be a good thing to rid the country of such a tyrant; that Mr. HALL was selected that day on the estate, and that his servant was to and the companion agreed to go there also and see how the job could be done; that he saw Mr. HALL walking in the field with a sword cane in his hand; that he stole up quietly on the grass behind him, with the pistol up his sleeve, and that when he was quite close, Mr. HALL heard him and turned round and asked him what he wanted; he feigned some excuse, saying he came to ask his honor's leave to go over the fence, which Mr. HALL refusing, he passed on. Again he stole up behind his victim near a bridge, and again Mr. HALL turned round, still suspicious of his design, but surprised at the coolness. The informer said he knew then twice baffled in his design, went aside to his companion, and, dashing down the pistol on the ground beside him, said with an oath: 'I see it is unlucky; I will have nothing to do with it.' The young man coolly took up the pistol. 'You are an infernal coward,' said he; 'give me it; I'll do it myself.'

Mr. HALL was still walking in the fields enjoying the coolness of this sunny day in May. The young man came up unperceived within twenty yards of him. Mr. HALL heard him and turned round and took him. The stalkers walked on and, without speaking, shot down the priming of their pistols to Mr. HALL. Mr. HALL was unarmed, and, seeing him come steadily and silently on, he half drew his sword-cane, at last suspecting that mischief must be intended. The man still continuing to approach, Mr. HALL sprang back a step or two in order to get his sword-cane free; and in doing so stumbled over a stunted oak root and fell. The young man then went steadily up to him, and before Mr. HALL could rise up or recover himself, he put the pistol down close to his head and shot him dead upon the spot. The moment he had done so he threw the pistol into the adjoining hedge, walked quietly to meet his companion, put his hands into his pockets, never left the ground, and was one of those whom we afterward saw standing near the body."

Notwithstanding this very clear story, which was given in evidence, the prisoner escaped a conviction on the first trial, the jury standing eleven for acquittal one for conviction. On the second trial the following scene took place:

"After the witness had detailed how he had himself undertaken to be the murderer, and had twice stolen behind Mr. HALL for the purpose of shooting him in the back, and had only given up his design because he fancied it was 'unlucky,' the prisoner's counsel said: 'Then it was not your conscience which smote you?' 'Not a bit,' replied the man. 'And you stole up behind the poor old gentleman to shoot him for money?' said the lawyer. 'I did.' 'I suppose you would do anything for money?' 'I would,' replied the man, quite unmoved and growing fearless. The lawyer still continued to excite him: 'You would shoot your father for money, I suppose?' 'I would.' 'Or your mother?' 'I would.' 'Or your sister?' 'I would.' 'Or your brother?' continued the counsel. 'Ay, or yourself either!' cried the infuriated ruffian, almost leaping from his chair, and turning round as suddenly crouching down. A few more of his cross-examiners seemed that his assassin understood, and was almost repelled by the ferocity of the savage. A thrill of horror ran through the Court, while some, half-frightened, could not help smiling, and some laughing outright at the unexpected close given to the able cross-examiner. The effect upon the jury, however, seemed to me to be the reverse of what the counsel had intended. His object had been to impeach the witness' veracity by making him admit his own depravity, never for one moment believing that he would have acknowledged to such recklessness in crime; but the admission he made or his willingness to commit any barbarity, and the ferocity with which he turned upon his cross-examiner, left not a doubt upon the mind of any one who had witnessed the scene of the truthfulness of his testimony."

The murderer was this time convicted, and in a fortnight after was executed. Tipperary for a long time after was quiet.

Mr. TRENCH's first experience as an agent was not so all encouraging. Mr. SERJEANT engaged him to look after his property in the county of Fermoy, and going down there with his employer he found the tenants in a great state of jubilation over the death of the former agent, chiefly because he had not responded to their demand to reduce their rents. After some inefficient maneuvering to secure from the proprietor himself concessions which they had failed to get from his former agent, the tenantry turned out en masse one morning, and gathered around the agent's rent office, near Carrickmacross, where they knew Mr. SERJEANT was. The crowd gradually increased until it numbered at least 10,000, nearly all of them of that ignorant, unreasoning class of which, as a rule, the tenantry in Ireland is made up, and as they were becoming more and more clamorous with their increasing numbers, it at last became evident that some one must address them, and Mr. TRENCH finally went out of his office to do so. The crowd insisted on his getting upon a chair, so that they might see him and hear better what he had to say, and having done so, he told them that Mr. SERJEANT had concluded that no reduction of rent was necessary, but that he should himself try to visit as many of the tenants as he possibly could, and wherever he found grievances which it was possible to remove, he should remove them. The rest of the story he shall tell in his own words:

"There was a dead silence when I stopped speaking. It was broken by a western man, who cried:

"'Then you won't reduce our rents?'

"'I have already given you Mr. SERJEANT's answer upon that point,' said I. 'Stranger as I am, it is impossible for me to form any opinion as to whether they are too high or not.'

"'Divil a bit they are!' said a voice, amidst the same noise; 'we will ask him, once more upon our knees', and, to my horror and amazement, the whole crowd, almost all at least who were in my immediate vicinity, dropped suddenly on their knees, and another dead silence ensued. It was a dreadful spectacle. Their hats were on their heads, and their sticks in their hands, some leaning upon them and the ground, others shaking, and grasping them. It was fearful to see the attitude of supplication, due only to a higher power, thus mingled with a wild defiance.

"'We ask you, upon our knees, for God's sake to get us a reduction of our rents!' again the same voice cried out.

I was greatly shocked. I instantly put down off the chair. I entreated them to rise. I told them that I was distressed beyond measure, but that I had given them the only message I was authorized to give; and quite overcome by such a scene, I endeavored to move again across the crowded space to the house I occupied on the road leading to Mr. BURNLEY, intending to request that he would immediately and address his excited tenantry. The moment I moved toward the door the vast crowd leaped again to their feet; I was instantly surrounded, hustled and prevented going near it. I bore this good-humoredly, and at the door being quite close to me, I had no doubt they would immediately let me in. But while this scene was going on a shout was raised by those who were at a distance up the road leading to the town, and who had not heard what had been said; 'Bring him up! bring him up and let us see him!' In a moment I was seized, and though I resisted to the utmost of my power, I was dragged up the narrow road which led from the house to the town; I was kicked, and beaten, and pushed, and bruised, my hat knocked off and my clothes torn, and in this state I was dragged into the main street of Carrickmacross. * * * * * *

At length, after walking a great distance, I was so bruised and ill-used that I felt myself becoming faint, and well knowing that if once I fell I should be trodden down without a chance of my life, I asked to stop for a few moments to breathe. I shall never forget that moment. I was then about a mile from the town, on the broad and open road leading to Loughsle Castle. I turned and looked around me, thinking my last hour was come, and anxious to see if there was one kind face, one countenance I had ever before seen, who at least could tell my friends how I had died. But I looked in vain. The hills were crowded with people. The long line of road was one mass of human beings, while those immediately around me, and with countenances, seemingly by the fury of their fury blood, thirsty for a few moments' breathing time, and seeing all appeal to be vain, I turned again on my way, determined, however, to hold out to the last, as I felt that to fall or faint must be certain death. Just then I became conscious of an able hand and a stout heart beside me, and I heard a whisper in my ear: 'Stick to me, Mr. TRENCH, I'll save your blood; but hold up, they shall have some fun.' The speaker grasped my arm firmly under his own, and walked steadily by my side. By the time I was completely naked with the exception of my trousers. My coat, even my shirt, had been torn off, and I walked on, still beaten and ill-used, like a man in execution; my head bare, and without any clothes from my waist upward. To increase the misery of my situation, I found that my friend had been beaten and dragged away in spite of himself, and again I was left alone in the hands of these merciless men. I felt, too, that I could not go one further, and that a last effort must be made before my senses left me from exhaustion. Stopping, therefore, once more, I asked to be let toward a high bank near the roadside, and leaning against this I turned full facing those whom I now believed would soon become my executioners. 'I can go no further,' said I; 'what have you brought me here for? What do you want me to do?' Again the same voice which I had heard first at the office, though I could not identify the person from the shouting and confusion around me, cried aloud, 'We want a reduction of our rents; will you promise to get us that?' I paused, my mind, as a last effort to save my life, and hoping they would name something I could promise to ask for, 'And what reduction will you be content with?' Again the same voice replied, 'We will never pay more than one-half our present rents.' 'Enough,' said I, 'there ends the matter. I never will promise that.' There was a pause, and a dead silence. I stood with my back to the bank and looked before them. They stood opposite to me, with their sticks clenched in their hands, ready to strike. I looked at them, and they at me. They hesitated. No one would strike as long as I knew that they wavered, and instinctively, in a moment, I felt that I had won. The strange pause continued; when, at length a shout was raised from the old centurian voice again, 'Shame of yourselves, your lives. No one shall harm him—he is a good man after all;' and in a moment I was surrounded by a new set of those who danced furiously toward me. They raised me on their shoulders, swept my old friend over with them, placed me down under a cliff, and carried me, now completely exhausted, and almost fainting, into the demesne of Loughsle. * * * In the evening I was conveyed in a covered carriage to Carrickmacross, blackened with bruises, stiff and sore, and scarcely able to stand—musing over the strange transactions which happened that day—and stripped to a nothingness of clothes cost, which had been borrowed to cover my nakedness."

The most notable of the adventures or encounters Mr. TRENCH had with individuals was that with one JOE MCKEE, a tenant calling himself a Presbyterian, who had for five years paid no rent, but whom no one dared arrest, on account of his reputation for desperate courage and daring. This man was the acknowledged leader of all the tenantry over a large district of the estate, and it was generally said that "unless JOE MCKEE were put down or overcome, the district in which he lived would hold out in defiance of both law and order." Mr. TRENCH determined to bring matters to an issue with this man, and accordingly, as a first step, issued a warrant against him for debt, and offered £50 to any one who would arrest him. To his surprise no one came forward to earn the reward, and Mr. TRENCH finally determined to take the case in hand personally. Loading carefully a brace of double-barreled pistols, on which he could thoroughly depend, Mr. TRENCH one day, without giving any person a hint of his intention, rode over to MCKEE's cottage. He found the desperado at home, and, of course, took him entirely by surprise. A parley took place before MCKEE would admit Mr. TRENCH to his cottage, which he finally did, but only when that gentleman taxed him directly with his cowardice in refusing entrance to a man who had come alone, and simply to have a talk with him. Once inside Mr. TRENCH found that MCKEE, with his companions—a woman and two men, each between thirty and forty—were engaged in distilling "potheen." MCKEE was a finely formed and very muscular man, about six feet in height, and with not a superfluous ounce of flesh on him—just such a man, in short, as the best would hesitate to encounter in a personal struggle, and one whom Mr. TRENCH felt conscious that he would be altogether unable to cope with individually. After some preliminary skirmishing, Mr. TRENCH came directly to the point and asked MCKEE how he expected to settle the arrearages of his rent. In reply, MCKEE invited him to go into another room where they could talk the matter over by themselves. In this apartment there were only two chairs, a small table, a bed, and beside the bed a bill-hook—a most formidable looking weapon—leaning against the wall. Taking care to place himself between MCKEE and this bill-hook, Mr. TRENCH again returned to the charge:

"'I have come to ask you seriously what you are going to do, for you must know that things cannot go on with me as they did before. He rose up haughtily, and standing close to me at the table, I never saw you before, sir, and I don't know what brings you of all men, here now, but I tell you plainly I never will pay rent, I never will give up my farm, I never will, I never will, I never will,' stamping at every stroke, he continued again, and I never will be driven off my farm, I never will give up my farm.' He became so excited and almost so frantic at the window and so often at the bill-hook, that I grew quickly too. His nerves seemed wrought into a most extraordinary state of tension, and he seemed gathering himself as if to spring at the bill-hook. I drew my pistols from my pocket, cocked them, and held one in either hand, my eye still fixed upon him. We stood opposite to each other, the small table only between us. I knew that if once a personal struggle should commence with such a frame as that, I had not a chance of my life, and feeling now convinced that he had got me into that room to kill me, I was determined if he attempted to shoot him. But a lair diffused itself suddenly in his mind, yet leaving him as equally to violence. He thought that I had collected the bailiffs or police outside, that I had discovered him—that I had got out his house to arrest him myself; and he was determined either to take my life or to lose his own first, and there we stood like two tigers, watching who would spring first. His mind seemed made up, he is not quail in the least; and after wavering one to another for some minutes—during which time I felt almost a quiver of his eye would have made me shoot him, so great was the tension of my own nerves. I slowly and gradually raised the pistol—without for a moment losing the hold of my eye—upon him—till it fairly covered his head. He evidently saw the muzzle have been straight into the barrels of my pistol, when quietly drawing himself up and folding his arms very slowly, as if to show that no sudden movement was intended, he seemed to defy me to fire. A feeling came over me as quick as lightning, with a conviction that I was in error, which only moments such as these can bring—that I had mistaken him, that he was acting on the defensive rather than the offensive, and with an impulse which to this hour I am wholly unable to account for, I dashed the pistol on the table within his reach, and saw by relief in my own excited feeling. 'You accomplish, you know you dare not harm me!'

He looked at me steadily, and then, sitting down gravedly and quietly on the chair, without trusting himself to look at the pistols, which lay inland and cocked on the table before him, he put his hands to his head, leaned his arms on the table, and said, in a low voice:

'What do you want me to do, sir?'

'To give me possession of your house and place at once,' said I, 'and to come with me now to Carrickmacross.'

'I will, Sir,' he replied.

He went and his from fingers into the place where the handle of the door should have been, turned the bolt, and, walking up to the other men in the kitchen, he said, 'Begone out of that till I give up the place.' They stared at him and some perceptibly astonished. 'Begone, I say,' he repeated, and he pushed them out of the room. The young woman then came up to him, 'What is this for?' she asked. 'You must go,' said he kindly. 'Don't talk—leave the house!' She went at once. He put out the fire by kicking it about the floor, took sod and twig from the garden, and handed me legal possession of the house and garden. 'And now,' I continued, 'come with me into Carrickmacross.' He hesitated: 'Sir, I will follow you in, but don't ask me to ride with you.' 'Why not?' I asked. 'Because I swore no man should ever take me alive, and if I was seen to go in with you the people would say you had taken me prisoner.' 'I understand you, said I: 'Can I trust you, then? Will you go?' He seemed almost hurt at the question: 'I would not fail in my word for a thousand pounds!' 'I have no doubt of it,' I replied, and I mounted my horse and galloped into Carrickmacross."

McKEE was as good as his word. He went to Carrickmacross and made a formal submission, but the sequel of the story is sad enough. Although he intended to come to this country, he did not live to leave Ireland, for he actually died of mortification and broken-heartedness at the taunts of his old neighbors and companions, who insisted on it that Mr. TRENCH took him prisoner.

But finally Mr. TRENCH, himself fell under the ban of the Ribbonmen, who offered a reward of £50 to any one who would "put him off the walk." He received prompt information of the fact, and, after due consideration, determined to face his enemies and see the quarrel to the end. This certainly required an extraordinary degree of courage, for there were no devices of cowardice to which these villains were not ready to resort to secure their object. He never dared pass from his office to his lodging, a distance of a few hundred yards and in the town itself, without being heavily armed, and at night he was compelled, in order to protect himself, to bring his pistol to bear upon every individual who attempted to approach him while he was in the street. Whenever he was called out into the country on business he was invariably accompanied by his son and another young man, both heavily armed and under positive instructions, if he should at any time be fired upon, not to pay any attention to him until they had secured those who might have attempted the assassination. This precaution was an important one, because in nearly every instance in which the Ribbonmen had committed a murder, the assassins had escaped in the first confusion and while the friends of the victim were looking after and caring for him. For a whole year Mr. TRENCH did not omit a single one of these precautions, for whenever his vigilance was absent relaxing, the assassination of some other agent or proprietor acted as a renewed warning. With their usual superstition, the ignorant men who had pledged themselves to commit the murder began to conclude that the task they had taken upon themselves was unlucky, and, giving Mr. TRENCH the go by for the time, they determined first to get one of his assistants, a bailiff, out of the way. By a fortunate conjunction of circumstances, the bailiff escaped, and the assassins were caught by the Police as they were in the very act of carrying out their murderous design against this man, PADDY MCARDLE; and one of them, THORNTON, to save his own life, promptly turned informer. The statements which he made to Mr. TRENCH personally shed a great deal of light upon the conspiracy against him, and the conversation which he had with THORNTON are detailed at great length. Here is a single passage from THORNTON's narrative:

"'Do you remember, Sir, the night you were returning, you and Monaghan and another chap, my son, the day after they killed old BATESON? Well, sir, there was twelve flying behind a wall determined to save your life, and, by the blood of Christ, we up and saved you. We were angered that you should still be on the walk, and the boys in Castle Blayney got down a man that was not wanted nigh as much as you. And do you remember, Sir, the evening you were returning home from Cullaville, and the two chaps ridden out on each side of you, and you with the big pistols in the holsters? and we let you pass that night too. 'And why did you not fire?' I asked.

Bedad we were scared, Sir, he replied. 'We heard you could shoot a crow on a bush with a pistol, and we thought it was a sign you knew where to aim! Bedad we were afeared to fire lest may be we'd miss you, and then we were sure to be dead men.'

'Then my always riding with armed men along side of me was not a bad plan?' said I.

'Bedad, I'd think so! for that, you were a powerful man, as any of your's new flesh and blood! Shure, weren't we watching where to aim bedad to catch you without them, and didn't we try to get at you in the street when going home at night from the office, and fair I suspect somebody must have told you about it, as I was just going up to you myself, as innocent as a lamb—one night with a letter, and Hodgens was to have put a pistol to your side as you took the letter, and just pulled the trigger, and scarce more any one would know about it!'

'Now, did any one tell you?' he inquired, after a pause, and with an inquisitive smile, as if his own little mystery he would like to see cleared up before he left the country. 'Well, indeed, I was told of your kind intentions.' 'Bedade, I always said so!' he exclaimed, clapping his thigh with satisfaction at having his previous suspicions confirmed on the point. 'Bedade, I knew the strange man went on now delighted to tell me of how nearly he succeeded on sundry occasions in killing me, and now lamenting Hodgen's fate in as easy, sentimental way; talking of him some times as 'Bim that was no more,' and some times as 'the deceased,' as if he had nothing whatever to do in bringing about his death."

Before Mr. TRENCH got through with this main, he procured from him numerous other important facts bearing upon this conspiracy, as well as the names of fifteen or twenty Ribbonmen who were abettors. HOGGENS, his immediate accomplice, THORNTON alleged, knew very much more about the organization than he did himself, and Mr. TRENCH went so far as to secure the promise of a reprieve for him if he would also turn informer. He was upon the point of yielding to the offer, but finally nerved himself to meet his fate, and carried his secret with him to the gallows.

It is difficult to believe that such events as those narrated in the Realities of Irish Life have occurred so recently as since 1850, yet the very recent announcement of the assassination of a local Magistrate in Ireland is convincing proof that the murderous rule of the Ribbon Society has not yet passed away, and that Mr. TRENCH's narrative is quite as much a story of what is now as of what has been. In giving a sketch of the contents of the volume we have inadvertently selected incidents in which the tragic element preponderates, but the narrative is relieved by many remarkable, and now and then by episodes which might almost be classed as comic, making it readable throughout and indeed absorbingly interesting.

The events which Mr. TRENCH narrates do not, it must be confessed, shed much light upon the proper solution of the great problem which English statesmen now have to face as regards Ireland. They bring out into a clearer light the difficulties which must be met, and the judgment of every American reader will of course be that the only cure which can be effectual must be a radical one,—one which shall give to the men who live upon the estates some chance to become small owners. But such a revolution as this is of course not at present anticipated, and Ireland must get in some other way that "justice" which Mr. TRENCH himself acknowledges is the cry that invariably comes up from that unhappy country.

ENGLISH, PAST AND PRESENT. Eight Lectures by RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, D. D., Archbishop of Dublin. New-York: CHAS. SCRIBNER & CO.

It is rare that the sixth edition of any book calls for special comment, beyond the criticism which its first and second have received; and certainly no exception to the general rule exists in the case of the admirable lectures of Archbishop TRENCH. That they have arrived at the sixth edition is a very practical token of their wide circulation; and they no longer, therefore, need introduction or eulogy. What we may specially point out, however, at this moment, is the considerable addition of notes made since the first edition, which, of course, enhances the value of what was already a rich contribution to English philology. And, by the way, it is in a note that Archbishop TRENCH, claiming that English is a "world-language," cites this felicitous passage from DARWIN—a poet living and writing two centuries ago, and with prophecy enough in him in this matter, to justify his name:

"And who, in time, knows whither we may vent
The treasure of our tongue, to what strange shores
This gain of our best glory shall be sent,
To enrich unknowing nations with our stores?
What worlds in the yet unform'd Occident
May come refined with the accents that are ours?"

The discovery of that happy and enviable quotation would have been a fortune to Mr. BENJAMIN JOWETT, or to anybody else who has had occasion of late, to discourse on the "bonds of the common language" of England and America.

Archbishop TRENCH, in speaking of "American English," declares truthfully that it is "often old English rather than bad English;" and this opinion, under various forms of expression, he several times repeats. He even takes care to thank his American cousins for preserving freshet, snag, bluff, hedge, stick, to whittle, to over-in, to rile, to snarl—all of which he finds in old English literature. Most people have taken sick as a pure Yankee invention; but TRENCH quotes BULLEYN, who describes the New Jerusalem as "fairer, finer, slicker, smoother, more exact, than any fabric the earth afforded." LOWELL cites CHAPMAN and JONSON for the same word. But, if the reader wishes to get fuller and more special information upon this point, let him consult BARTLETT's Dictionary of Americanisms, or, still better, LOWELL's "Introduction" to the Second Series of his Biglow Papers. In this last work, not only our whole Yankee vocabulary is championed, and the title and pedigree of each downeast word vindicated, but even Yankee pronunciation is shown to be mainly that of English, some centuries ago! The Yankee preterites "rin" for rose, "give" for gave, "shet" for shut, and "thriv," "quit," "het," and "pled," are proved to be very good archaic English.

In his discussion of "English a Composite Language," TRENCH displays so much sound sense and such commendable good judgment and moderation, where philologists are so apt to run to extremes, that one can hardly read it too often. Our natural fondness for Saxon, which holds so much strength and beauty in its forms, and so much tenderness and pathos in its meanings, often leads us to underrate the store of fine shades of expression which the Latin and its derivatives have given us. "We could almost," says TRENCH, "as ill spare this portion of the language as the other." And, indeed, the works of the best writers of English very well show how admirably these two elements may be mingled to produce a composite language, stronger, richer and finer than either of its parts. The sturdy Saxon is set off by the more elaborate Latin—the Latin woof running across the Saxon warp, gives firmness and value to the whole fabric. The Lord's Prayer contains six Latin words—six out of seventy; and, though their proportion is small, yet there is nothing offensive in any one of them, nor should we desire one of them to be changed for its Saxon equivalent. SHAKESPEARE pours the two streams of Latin and English words together, in their just proportions, to make up his mighty current. Yet, on the other hand, one of the favorite English authors, the delight of all subsequent lovers of good English, Sir THOMAS BROWNE, immoderately crowded his pages with Latin words. Many of these have since dropped from the language. What should we think of a writer of our day expressing himself in this way? "Assuefaction unto anything minorates the passion from it." Saxon monosyllables would have set forth the same idea. Yet the Religio Medici and the Urn-Burial are the delight of our age, as of others preceding, showing that even too much Latin will not of itself ruin a writer's style. And that this was a voluntary choice on Sir THOMAS BROWNE's part, is seen from his many sentences of which Latin forms a very small part, and from those few which (for the mere sake of the experiment) he laboriously constructed with every word in them Saxon.

But we break off here, lest what we meant to be a slight paragraph shall grow to a long article. Whoever wishes to study the "gains and losses" of our language, and its changes in meaning and spelling with the lapse of time, will find no better hand-book for his purpose than this of Archbishop TRENCH. It is terse and crowded with material, without being in the least dry. The author's style is at once easy and correct—so different from the equally correct but stiff and prim style of Mr. MOON, for example, who writes as though he "parsed" all his sentences before leaving them, and who gives the impression of an author forever wrapping up his verbs in his nominatives, and pelting in his nominatives to his verbs, and drawing in his adverbs on this flank, and his adjectives on the other, lest some hostile philologist shall suddenly make a dash upon his columns, and capture some errant part of speech, or otherwise throw his into confusion. The English churchmen of our day are keeping up their traditional reputation by contributions to philology. Archbishop TRENCH stands at their head, and may rank bearer to the GRIMMS and MÜLLERS than to the ALFORDS and MOONS of philology.

—The Flower of Liberty. Edited and Illustrated by JULIA A. M. FURSMAN. (Boston: BENJAMIN B. RUSSELL.) This volume grew out of a patriot design. During the first year of the war the editress began painting for herself, in water-colors, a book of national emblems—principally representations of the Stars and Stripes, the American eagle, &c., &c., in various positions, interspersing these illustrations with pictures of camps, ships, cannon, &c. These illustrations are now published, in tinted lithography, in a volume containing a large number of patriotic poems, selected from the writings of WHITTIER, HOLMES, LONGFELLOW, JULIA WARD HOWE, and others. Some of the designs are rather fantastic; but the volume presents an attractive appearance, and will no doubt please a great many readers.

—Watchwords for the Warfare of Life. From Dr. MARTIN LUTHER. Translated by the author of the Schonberg-Cotta Family. (New-York: E. W. DOON.) "Man is a soldier and life is a fight," says ROBERT BURNS in one of his lyrics; and so said, or might have said, the great German reformer, one of the most robust and consecrated spirits of the sixteenth century, who sincerely believed the Deity to be a Being sternly fastidious respecting the homage due to him from the various tribes and races of mankind, and who nourished in all fortunes, the idea that the truest divine service was the service of an austere and militant spirit, a song of defiance against the devil and his angels, and a long agony of human championship and endurance to the close—a theology of contest and controversy, derived evidently from the ancient Hebrews of Asia Minor—and, indeed, from all other historic nations of the old Eastern World as well. He was a strange compound—a representative man of his own age of transition—a man of simple conscience and a narrow philosophy, but all the more intense and decided in feeling and action for that reason. He had many of the beliefs and hallucinations of his time. He firmly believed in the existence and power of God's adversary, the Devil, and in a variety of demons going to and fro in the earth and doing his work. It is on record that, being once called in to see a little weaseled child with an enormous appetite that was never the fatter for all its food, he declared it had a devil—was, in fact, that sort of thing called, in Germany, a Kill-crop, and he informed the Prince of Anhalt-Dessau, his life-long friend, that, cruel as it may seem, it would be better to throw the creature into the Moldau—a piece of advice which that chieftain disregarded—being rather easy and indifferent in the matter of religious conviction. This only shows that LUTHER was not in advance of his age any more than the good Sir MATTHEW HALE and COTTON MATHER, who dealt so severely and conscientiously with some incomprehensible old women of their day and generation. MARTIN was of an impulsive, honest nature, and, in spite of his order and general profession, a lover of human comforts in a temperate and a cheerful way, with his family. He was said to be fond of quoting—probably in his earlier days—the genial old proverb of the Middle Ages:

"He is a fool, his whole life long,
Who loves not women, wine and song."

He had always a loving and tender heart for his wife and children; and his sayings by the deathbeds of some of these are very touching in their mixture of elevated belief, and the sorrow that would have way in spite of it. The work before us does the English reader good service in gathering from tones of theology a choice collection of LUTHER's sayings, most of which have that meaning of Christian militancy which he considered a vital necessity of the Christian profession. They are all in the evangelical spirit of the doctrine which goes by his name, and such as the devout can best appreciate, while certain peculiarities of his genius and of the age he lived in, are calculated to arrest the attention of the general reader. Some of his ideas, especially those concerning the Evil Spirit, are peculiar and very personal; others are full of a simple and household morality, while in several may be found some of that fanciful grace which came naturally to him as a German—his idea of guardian angels of children, for instance. "From early childhood," he says, "I would accustom a child to be told: 'Dear child, thou hast an angel of thine own. When thou prayest, morning and evening, the same angel will be with thee, and sit beside thy little bed clothed in a white robe; will take care of thee, lull thee to sleep and guard over thee, that the evil one, the devil, may not come near thee. So also, when thou gladly sayest the Benedicite and the Gratias, at thy meals, thy angel will be with thee at table; will serve thee and guard thee.' If we pictured this to children from their earliest years, that angels are with them, this would not only make the dear children trust to the guardianship of the angels, but it would make them gentle and good, for they would think—If our parents are not here, the angels are here, and the evil one must not tempt us to do wrong."

LUTHER believed in angels, investing them with a human sympathy. He also invested them with his favorite attribute of championship—he called them the armies of heaven, who would wield the sword of war on occasion—a Miltonic idea. He kept his ideas or the military and the terrible to the last. His friend SPERATUS said, one day, "As I was on my way here, I saw a glorious rainbow, and I thought of the last day." Like Dr. JOHNSON, with his formidable No, Sir! the theological veteran retorted: "No, it will not come ushered by rainbows. It will come with a crash; with fire and thunder and lightning the whole creation shall pass away. A mighty trumpet-peal will awaken and renew us all! The heavens will become troubled, and there will be earthquakes and thunders perhaps for an hour or longer. Then the people who see it will say—See, see, you foolish creature! Did you ever hear thunder before? And suddenly the whole world will fall together, and many a debt will remain unpaid." MARTIN LUTHER would not accept the beatitude of heaven itself without some preliminary uproar of things in general, and a clash of terror and discomfiture for the unlucky survivors of the human race.

This curious as well as edifying work is got up in excellent style on toned paper.

—English Christmas Annuals. BRENTANO sends us a number of the beautiful Annuals which our English cousins always get out as a greeting to the jolly Christmas holidays. Why don't our publishers attempt something of this sort? There are half a dozen or more of these, entertaining annuals, each about the size of a monthly magazine, illustrated in the handsomest manner, and containing short stories by the best writers of magazine literature in England. The most interesting of the set is the Belgravia Annual, edited by Miss BRADDON. TOM HOOD's Comic Annual is also excellent in the way. In fact, all of these will furnish entertaining reading for the long Winter evenings that are now upon us; and as none of our own publishers have given us a New-York Christmas Annual, we must be duly grateful to BRENTANO for bringing over these.

Fatal Accident at a Shooting Match.

From the Toronto Leader, Jan. 2.

A fatal accident occurred yesterday afternoon at a shooting match at Mr. MCFARLANE's hotel, some six miles from the city. Yesterday afternoon a party of sportsmen left the city to engage in a turkey shooting match, Mr. CALEB GILES of Windsor-street, being of the number, and invited parties from the country met them and engaged in the match about noon. When the last turkey was killed, it being about half o'clock, a few of the company remained on the ground to see the bird brought up to the place of shooting, and while standing in a group on the report of a rifle was heard and Mr. GILES fell in the ground totally injured. It was then ascertained that a rifle resting on the shoulder of Mr. SOME BURNHAM, a resident of the plank road, near Dundas, had unconsciously gone off, and shot the deceased. Mr. BURNHAM was standing at the time with his back toward Mr. GILES. An examination showed that the ball had entered a inch above the left ear and had gone out at the top of the head. The injured man was of course carried into the hotel, and all that could possibly be done for him was promptly performed. In the meantime, Mr. ANDERSONE, of Yorkville, was sent for, but when he arrived he was informed by professional men that GILES fatally injured. He died about 7 o'clock in the evening.

The deceased was one of the most warm-hearted sportsmen in Toronto, and his loss will be deeply and generally deplored by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was a member of the city of Toronto Rifle Club, and was ever ready to promote its interests in the most generous manner.

AUDUBON'S BIOGRAPHY.

The announcement, some days since, of the appearance in England of AUDUBON's biography made up from his papers, at a superficial glance, filled us with expected pleasure. But our enthusiasm was soon weakened when we read that the printed volume contained only about one-fifth of the matter included in the manuscript! It is not usual to complain in these days of literary works being too brief, but by what authority or for what reason should the matter furnished by AUDUBON to the amount of four large printed volumes, relating to the early history of the South and West, be thrown aside by his biographer?

AUDUBON commenced his labors of observation of the Western country as early as 1808, in which year he made his bridal tour with his accomplished wife in a flatboat, from Pittsburg to Louisville. And for more than a half century he employed his picturesque pen in noting incidents and making history, independent of his immediate pursuits, as an ornithologist.

AUDUBON has had no superior in graphic descriptions of frontier life; at least, we might say all that he has written, is of immense value, either for detailed information, or for suggesting hints that lead to correct conclusions. We cannot understand why Mr. AUDUBON's family put AUDUBON's papers in the hands of Mr. BUCHANAN, a Scotch poet. What could he know of the country that AUDUBON so industriously threaded; how could he appreciate the nameless little incidents that AUDUBON has recorded, which, to the educated American, would be invaluable, but which, to Mr. BUCHANAN, would be nonsense indeed. A great misfortune it will be, if the material for "four volumes of printed matter" has been destroyed; if not, let our publishers vie for the purchase of it; and, let our written history be enriched by all that AUDUBON has put on paper; less than this will be doing injustice to one of the most original minds our country has ever produced.

We perceive that Mr. BUCHANAN, with most unpardonable evidence of his want of appreciation of AUDUBON's true character, pronounces AUDUBON a queer compound of Actæon and Narcissus, holding a gun in one hand and a looking-glass in another; and that this most unjust epitome of character is persisted in, even after Mrs. AUDUBON desired that it be left out, as unjust to her husband's memory, and as particularly unnecessary to be mentioned by her husband's chosen biographer. Mr. BUCHANAN, with a singular want of gallantry which is only equaled by his evident inability to thoroughly appreciate AUDUBON's character, reiterates the offensive criticism in the preface to his work. It is a matter of little and great moment this offensive allusion to the naturalist's personal peculiarities. History presents many men of truly great minds, who have been possessed by vanity; but it is a defect in the character, and has been so always understood. If it were true of AUDUBON, it was not the business of his biographer to mention it; if it is untrue, as it unquestionably is, then it displays a want of that just discrimination which should characterize the biographer.

When we first arrived in Louisiana more than thirty years ago, we were pleasantly surprised to find that our temporary home was within range of much of AUDUBON's most faithfully searched country. Almost every old resident we met could tell us something about the man; and although we heard much to satisfy us that his pursuits were altogether unappreciated, yet we never heard anything that did not reflect honor on his character as an enthusiastic disciple of nature

THE MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Their Value—The Weakness of the Country they Protect—The Defects in the Present Levee System.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The Mississippi, from the mouth of Red River to New-Orleans, constitutes within its comparatively narrow banks the water drained from nearly two-thirds of the North American continent, including 35,000 miles of navigable streams. The Red River, which is one of the comparatively tributaries of the Mississippi, is 2,500 miles long, and drains a country larger and infinitely more fertile than Egypt. It is on the banks of the Red River, and its innumerable tributaries lying within the State of Louisiana, and upon the banks of the Mississippi, from the mouth of Red River to some forty miles below New-Orleans, that within the last half century has been established what is known as the "Louisiana Levee System."

The necessity of these embankments grows out of the fact that the shores which line these streams within the State of Louisiana are annually subject to overflow. Aside from this objection, no country on the globe presents so many attractions for the happiness of man.

And within a few years, under the auspices of free labor, it will undoubtedly be the garden spot of the world, for the soil is inexhaustible, the climate is mild without being enervating, and the expenses of dwellings, clothing and living are merely nominal, compared with the demands made in the colder regions of the North. In fact, free labor has never before had such an Eden for the display of its thrift, enterprise, and consequent material happiness.

The highest point on the banks of the rivers we have alluded to, within the "levee district," is at the shore line, and the land descends as you go inland about four inches to the mile. In the highest stage of the flood, which is designated the "Spring rise," the water would, if not obstructed, rise from two to five feet above the natural embankment, and rush with great velocity into the swamps. To avoid this catastrophe there is erected along the river front what is called the "levee." When one is built it is usual to place the foundations about thirty or forty yards from the face of the natural bank. The laborers throw up dirt from the outside, and vary the height of the levee from five to fifteen feet, according to the demand.

The levee pursues a zigzag course, for being too weak to give direction, it has to yield to the caprices of the current. If the bank on which the levee has been built threatens to "cave in," another levee is built in the rear. If a "cut off" occurs and changes the current of the river, then the levee in the vicinity is moved to the "front," so as to include what would otherwise be waste land. No permanency, indeed, is to be relied upon for the levee line. Houses that once stood two miles from the river bank, have, in time, "toppled into the surging waves of the Mississippi;" and houses again that were built near the bank, have had acres deposited in front of them.

As much as the river may change in its restless bed, it never alters its average width or sameness of appearance. What is engulfed by the swiftly rushing waters "in the bend" is thrown up on the opposite shore as the obtruding "point," and thus the Mississippi, ever changing, is eternally the same.

New-Orleans, poetically denominated the "Crescent City," is built on one of these graceful bends, yet just below, fortunately for its protection, is a "point." McDONOUGH, once the millionaire of New-Orleans, lived opposite the city, and his "home estate" was constantly caving in, and he observed with a miser's sorrow that the exact amount of land he lost came up in city lots on the opposite side of the river. It was suggested by a very acute surveyor that Mr. McDONOUGH have the latitude and longitude of his place taken and officially recorded, and then have the latitude and longitude of the opposite or city side of the river taken and officially recorded, and by this means he could establish a legal claim against New-Orleans and get well paid for the losses he sustained by his runaway land.

When the levees were first constructed, they were unimportant in their influence on the current of the river, but when cotton and sugar became the profitable agricultural productions of the country, plantations were rapidly opened, and of a necessity lands more and more "under high-water mark," were brought into cultivation, and the river itself was constantly brought within newly-constructed embankments; and thus it was, that, at the breaking out of the rebellion, the levees in Louisiana extended along both sides of the river to the Arkansas and Mississippi State levees, and reached far up Red River, and had interlacing levees on innumerable tributary streams.

By law, every planter was obliged to keep up the levee in front of his plantation, and when a "crevasse" was threatened or occurred, every negro laborer in the district affected was hurried from the plantations, and by superhuman efforts, and by the most ill-directed industry possible, the damages was as much as possible avoided.

For years before the levee system was destroyed by the efforts of the rebels to drown out the Federal forces operating against Vicksburg and Port Hudson, it was admitted by intelligent planters and good observers, that Louisiana was settled a century too soon, which meant that in another hundred years, if left undisturbed, by the annual deposits of the river, would have raised its banks to a level with the highest point of elevation. It was also admitted that more land was included within the protection of levees than could be securely held, for annually, the river broke through some point or another, and thus relieved itself from a general devastation of the country.

We have shown the value of the levees—spoken of the richness of the country they protect, and the manner they are built, and the suggestion crowds itself upon the mind, that accident and not design has devised the "system," and that it was imperfect in its operation, and had reached that point even before the rebellion, which would have compelled the planters to entirely change the manner of protecting themselves from overflow.

Under free labor, the imperative law of slavery, that called together the hosts of Egypt, or of Louisiana, to sweat and toil unpaid on the public works, has ended. The levees must hereafter be built on scientific principles, and instead of large tracts of country being depopulated, only small districts must be liable to waste from the accident of an overflow. The system of stopping up the natural outlets of the Mississippi, below the mouth of Red River, must be abandoned, and every bayou that led off the impending flood must be a gateway to carry the surging tide harmlessly to the Gulf.

There is nothing necessarily difficult in the problem of securing the lower Mississippi, the garden spot of the world, from its annual overflow. Providence has given intelligence to man to meet the difficulties, but it is man, free in the enjoyment of his intellect and resources, and a free, intelligent population, with small farms, and the consequent strength of a dense agricultural population will soon devise the way and command the resources that will secure lower Louisiana from all possible danger of an overflow.

A levee must protect a population united by mutual interests, and of the most friendly personal relations. The individual, however rich or however poor, is uninteresting, and the levee, under any circumstances, requires constant supervision. An immense quantity of water finds its way through the best-constructed levees, from the softness of the soil, or holes made by crawfish or crew fishes. Several years are necessary to really make a levee firm, and free from injury from rain. Levees must be continually watched, and there must be that friendly relationship that will secure the help of all when danger threatens. A malicious person in a few moments, without possible fear of detection, can submerge an entire district of country in his desire to injure an obnoxious individual.

Louisiana, through her Senators in Congress, is urging her claims for money to build these levees. She asks of Congress millions of dollars to carry on a work of State importance, when the same Congress begrudgingly appropriates a few thousands to remove the obstructions to national commerce that finds its way through the rocky pass of Hell Gate.

A loyal population can alone sustain a levee system which must now be erected on principles suited to free labor. If Congress had money to unconstitutionally appropriate to local enterprises it would be worse than useless to attempt under the present state of things in Louisiana to do anything for the levees of that State. Gen. GRANT has struck the key-note in his reply to United States Senator, Judge KELLOGG, and his friends from Louisiana, as reported in the St. Louis Democrat of the 30th ult., when he said:

"Let them [the plantations] overflow, and let them stay under water until their owners are willing that Northern men and Northern capital should come in and protect and improve them. Northern men, with ample capital, are ready to make a garden of your State, and you won't let them do it. Your large landholders are as hostile to the United States Government to-day as they have ever been, and if that Government should rebuild their levees it would not change them a particle. I know no way the Government could have adopted for rebuilding the levees but to have confiscated the lands of those engaged in rebellion, and used the proceeds to restore the country. As that was not done, nothing remains but to set your negroes to work and invite in and welcome Northern men."

Why, indeed, should Congress appropriate money to protect men who defy the laws and hate the Government? Why should communities be enriched by the very hospitality that is spit upon and denied? The very paper that contains the account of Gen. GRANT's decision has the following:

NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 31.—The editor of the Marksville Register, who is also the Clerk of the Seventh Judicial District Court, reports the total destruction of his office by a band of men led on by the editor of the Marksville Villager, a Democratic journal published at the same place.

The men employed in this outrage live under the protection of the levee that a loyal Republican Congress is asked to build.

EX-GOV. MOREHEAD.

How He Restocked His Plantation After the War—Particulars of His Sudden Death.

From the New-Orleans Times, Dec. 29.

The death of Ex-Gov. CHARLES S. MOREHEAD, which occurred on his plantation, on Deer Creek, just a week ago, was one of startling suddenness.

A few days before the Ex-Governor was in this city, when we had the pleasure of a most agreeable interview and conversation with him. The war had stripped him of a splendid estate—a large plantation and of many slaves. Besides, he had suffered many hardships and humiliations during that sorrowful era, had been arrested, imprisoned and exiled. An ardent Southerner, he warmly espoused the rebellion, and by his pen and tongue, and by his influence, was regarded a formidable champion of that cause. When the war closed his slaves were all emancipated, his plantation was a desert, and the bare land was not sufficient to satisfy a debt which, at the time it was incurred, was a mere trifle. Undismayed and unshaken by these great disasters, the Ex-Governor, though advanced in years, set to work with the zeal and ardor of youth and a sanguine temperament to resuscitate his prostrate fortunes.

Surrendering his estate and all his other property to his creditors, he engaged in the practice of law in Mississippi. At the same time the purchaser of his plantation insisted upon his leasing and cultivating it, only demanding for rent that it should be fenced and in good repair. Drawing around Adam his old slaves, he asked them if they were willing to go to work and hitch teams with him, and try and see if they couldn't pull through the deep slough in which the war had left them. "Yes, Massa," was the reply of the faithful negroes, "you were good to us when you were able, and we'll stick by you now."

And so the good and reliable of his old gang returned to the old home and went to work. But other instrumentalities were needed to cultivate a plantation beside hands. Horses, mules, plows, hoes, stock, hogs, and a great many other things were necessary. How could these be raised? Money could not be borrowed in Mississippi, nor in New-Orleans, at that time, on the contingent security of a cotton crop. The Governor was not much of a financier, but he was an excellent lawyer, and had already drawn around him a promising clientelle. He had been successful in several important cases. His clients, however, were, like him, without money; he had charged up a good list of fees, which it was pleasant and encouraging to look at and contemplate, but not profitable or conducive to the great object he had in view of putting his plantation in working order. Then occurred to him, as his clients were all planters, to collect his fees in stock and in such articles as were required for his plantation. He was gratified to find this proposition cordially and generously met by his clients. Some gave him mules, some horses and hogs, and others even furnished his house with their spare furniture, and in a little while the Governor found himself quite comfortable and able to put in a crop. With thirty mules, all realized by his law practice, and horses, and hogs, and agricultural implements, and by the devoted labor and thrift of his negroes, he managed this season to raise a good cotton crop, which had been picked, seeded, and packed in his gin-house, the value of which was about $15,000. Under these encouraging circumstances, he visited the city some eight or ten days ago, and called on his old friends, who were delighted by the hilarity, hopefulness, and prosperous circumstances of the "fine old Kentucky gentleman." His prospects, he declared, were never more cheering, and he felt as if he had taken a new lease of life, and in a short time confidently expected to be better off than he ever was. In this state of feeling he returned to his plantation, when his death occurred in the manner already related. The burning of his gin, which was the product of so much of effort, sacrifice and struggle, was a shock too great for his overworked mind. Though in apparent excellent health, when he saw the certain destruction of the fruits of his labor, he fell to the earth senseless, and when found by his faithful negroes he was a corpse.

The Slight to Mr. Beverdy Johnson.

To the Editor of the London Times:

SIR: My name having been most unpleasantly and unfairly prominent in connection with the above disgraceful business, will you kindly allow me to place the facts before your readers? I plead guilty to having proposed that a workingman's dinner to Mr. JOHNSON should be given. I did so for the following reasons: I had just been treated with extreme kindness by men of all classes in America, and wished to do anything which lay in my power to show some gratitude. I had been kindly treated because I was in some sort a representative of English workmen, and what, therefore, was more natural than that I should suggest, as the American Minister was receiving invitations from all parts of the country, that he should be invited to meet a number of working men from the North? Again, I had witnessed in the United States that a friendly message from a meeting of workingmen would be more acceptable there for various reasons than any number of good wishes from men in the higher ranks of English society. I mentioned the matter to the men—A few of whose names I enclose for publication, or not, as you think fit—and at their request I invited Mr. JOHNSON, who, thinking with me that a few kindly words spoken to his countrymen by workmen here would have a good effect, most cordially accepted the invitation.

Everything was arranged, the date fixed, an address to Mr. JOHNSON fully discussed and agreed upon, and a number of tickets sold, when some gentlemen who are in the habit of giving private advice to prominent workingmen, pointed out to some of my friends that they had made a mistake in electing me their chairman, because four years ago I had written some letters which they did not approve to the editor of the Times. Although I had been voted to the chair with only one dissentient, after the merits of these destitutes had been freely discussed, I told our Secretary, who showed me one of the letters he received, that I thought his correspondent was more nice than old women, but would myself propose that Mr. Odger should preside to prevent any unpleasantness. I did so, and he was accepted. The men who had thus privately driven me from the chair now directed that our meetings should be held at the Bethnal Green Lecture Hall, at least I am so entitled to believe, for in spite of my recommendation in favor of another address—No. 139 Strand—which was placed at our disposal, and was in every way a more suitable place, the members of our committee, who are in frequent correspondence with their middle-class advisers, made such a determined opposition that I and my more immediate friends were forced to leave the Workmen's League office we went. Here Mr. SHARPE appeared on the scene—I may be misinformed, but, as far as I know, uninvited. He walked up and down sitting in while we were waiting for Mr. Odger's arrival, in a manner which made me think he was embarrassed, and to set him at his ease I said, "Gentlemen, as Mr. SHARPE has honored us with his presence, I think he should be invited to take the chair as chairman." Mr. SHARPE did take the chair, and—I trust he will excuse me for saying that friendly act of his completed the disorganization which the private letters of his friends had already succeeded into our committee. When Mr. Odger had presided the week before he had shown great tact in regulating the discussion—Mr. SHARPE exhibited none. Members of the Reform League were allowed to say all sorts of silly things, which the chairman, as an active and patient as if they were talking sense, and, to crown the matter, although he was two or three times reminded that the Press was represented, he delivered a solemn speech in which the only point which I could detect was that the workingmen of London, whom real representatives (the chairmen) was, would do well to cautiously weigh the matter before they conferred any compliment to Americans through a "tainted medium"—i. e., the American Minister, who had honored us by accepting our invitation. A friend of a gentleman who was present, and called himself "Citizen Something," said he represented some international body of workmen who were of opinion that Mr. JOHNSON was unworthy to meet them; and—in spite of the substance of your leading article being again and again repeated in argument by myself and others—the members of the Reform League and the foreign gentlemen either could or would not see that there was anything for it but to submit our expected guest. The reports of this meeting had the effect of disgusting many decent men on the committee, and I was on every hand advised to withdraw at once. Feeling, however, that if Mr. JOHNSON was to be communicated with at all, it had better be done by men who would at least be certain not to go down and shake their fists in his face, I attended one more meeting of the committee, and made one more appeal to the gentlemanly feeling of the minority. It fails, and, not thinking the matter would become so public, I endeavored to put it in the mildest form consistent with truth, and, if possible, screen even those whose want of decency and want of sense had made them unable to screen themselves. Hence my letter to Mr. JOHNSON and his reply, which have excited so much comment. The insult has arisen from the backstairs interference of well-meaning men, who, without the responsibility of publicity, direct the tremendous power of trades' union. They worried Mr. ROEBUCK out of Sheffield, although I think he richly deserved it; they have passed a slight upon Mr. BEVERDY JOHNSON, who certainly does not. As for the Reform League, the uneasiness which that body has given a certain class of Englishmen has caused much amusement among those who have all along known the amount of their influence over working men. We are perfectly able to hold our meeting, and have our dinner to Mr. JOHNSON, but we were not able to insure him against possible annoyance from some of the gentlemen who meet weekly to decide upon the policy of Great Britain.

I am, Sir, yours, &c., ROBERT CONINGSBY.

Death of an Old Resident of Detroit.

From the Detroit Post, Dec. 29.

The widow of Major HENRY B. BREVOORT died at her residence, in this city, on Saturday evening, aged 86 years. CATHARINE NAVARRE BREVOORT was the daughter of ROBERT NAVARRE, the widow of Major HENRY B. BREVOORT, and the mother of JOHN V. BREVOORT, Esq., and Mrs. CHARLES L. BEECHER, of this city, and ELIZA BREVOORT, of New-Mexico. She was born, and spent her maiden days in the same house, now over a century old, the present residence of Mr. BREVOORT. His ancestors were officers under the French, when that Government first established a colony at Detroit, and were the lineal descendants of HENRY IV. of France. She has spent a long life in this community; has seen strange changes in Government and society, and almost three generations have passed away during her life. Her near relative, Gen. ALEXANDER MACOMB, was a soldier, whose name is inseparably connected with the history of the United States; her father was one of the pioneers of this country, and her husband, Major BREVOORT, the United States army—passed a long and eventful life in the service, among other things participating in PERRY's victory, as a volunteer, in command of the marines. In the death of this estimable lady, the past has lost a representative among us, and the present a tie which seemed to bind us to the stirring times in which our immediate ancestors lived. Her remains will be deposited in Elmwood, by the side of her husband, in accordance with her own most earnest request just before her death.

A Singular Accident in Manchester.

From the Manchester (N. H.) Mirror, Jan. 2.

At about 1 o'clock last night, a fire was discovered in a building on the back street between Hanover and Amherst streets, belonging to ISAAC RIDDLE. The watchman went to the spot, and found that a table and some bedding had been on fire, and the side of the room considerably smoked. A dead child, only a week old, was found buried on the left arm and neck. The fire was extinguished without giving an alarm. The facts appear to be that a woman by the name of SULLIVAN is the mother of the child. She was only temporarily there; but the child, which had not been very stout, died, as it is said, about bedtime last night, was laid out on a table, and surrounded with burning candles, after the custom of Catholics in this city, which, by some mishap, the candles burned down, set fire to the pillow and clothing, and burned the dead body.

Peaceful Condition of South Carolina.

From the Charleston News, Jan. 1.

South Carolina, the so-called "cradle of the rebellion," is, on this New-Year's Day, 1869, the most peaceful and secure of all the Southern States. We have a colored population of 400,000 and a white population of 276,000 or less; but order and quiet reign within our borders, and no such thing as widespread riot or terror has been known in this State. It is not that we have been free from the exciting causes of trouble and disaffection. Political firebrands and itinerant thieves have been as plenteous here as in any other part of the South; but white men and colored men labor soberly side by side, and the business of the whole State is in a healthy and thriving condition.

CITY GOVERNMENT.

Board of Councilmen—Stated Session.

[OFFICIAL.]

SATURDAY, Jan. 2, 1869—12 o'clock M.

(Concluded.)

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant in favor of John Paterson, Pastor of St. Phillips Protestant Episcopal Church, in Mulberry-street, for the sum of one hundred and twenty dollars, and that the same be paid to the trustees, to enable them to pay an assessment on their church property for the paving of Mulberry-street, between Bayard and Canal streets, with Belgian or trap-block pavement, and charge the same to the account of "Donations."

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That a sewer, with the necessary receiving basins and culverts, be built in Ninth-avenue, from the Third to the Fourth-avenue, under the direction of the Croton Aqueduct Department, and an ordinance therefor be adopted.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution and ordinance.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the sidewalks on the west side of Fifth-avenue, between Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth streets, and on both sides of Fifty-eighth-street, between First and Second avenues, be flagged four feet wide through the centre thereof, under the direction of the Street Commissioner, and an ordinance therefor be adopted.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution and ordinance.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Street Commissioner be and he is hereby authorized and directed to place a large gas lamp in the centre of Chatham-square, similar in all respects to the one now in the Bowery.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw a warrant in favor of Catherine Navarre Brevoort, for the sum of one hundred and twenty dollars, to be in full for rent of house from First-avenue to Second-avenue, and Fifty-eighth to Fifty-ninth-street, occupied by the late Major Henry B. Brevoort, for the use of the Commissioner of Public Works, and charge the same to the account of "Contingencies," or any other appropriate account.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant in favor of Abraham Van Horne, President of the Trustees of the True Reformed Dutch Church, situated on the southwest corner of Forty-second-street, for the sum of one hundred and twenty dollars, as a donation, to enable him to pay an assessment levied on said property for the extension of Church-street, the amount to be charged by the Comptroller to the account of "Donations."

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw a warrant in favor of Cornelius Van Anden, President of the Church of St. John the Baptist, corner of Lexington-avenue and Thirty-fifth-street, for the sum of five hundred and thirty-three and thirty cents, as a donation to enable the pastor to return the pew-rents collected for the use of the church for the purpose of said church, to that amount, for the world paving Thirty-fourth-street, between Third and Lexington-avenues, the amount to be charged by the Comptroller to the account of "Donations," or any other appropriate account.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That permission be and the same is hereby given to Paul D. Reed, to place a gas lamp in front of his premises, number fifty-six Chatham-street, the same to be done at his own expense, under the direction of the Street Commissioner.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant in favor of Mrs. Maria L. Daly, President of the Board of Managers of the "Daughters of Israel," for the sum of one hundred dollars, as a donation to enable the said managers to commence and carry on the work upon the property of the Home, and to be in addition to the funds received to the same purpose of caring for the orphans of our deceased soldiers, the amount to be charged by the Comptroller to the account of "Donations," or any other appropriate account.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw a warrant in favor of Martin Y. Brown, one of the trustees of the Moravian Church in West Seventh-street, for the sum of three hundred and seventy-five dollars, to be in full for donation, to be applied by said trustees in payment of an assessment on the property of the said church, for the work of paving Seventh-street, between Second-avenue to West-street, with Belgian pavement, the amount to be charged by the Comptroller to the account of "Donations."

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant in favor of Enoch Van Akan, President of the Consistory of the Reformed Dutch Church of Bloomingdale, for the sum of three thousand seven hundred and ninety dollars, to be in full for donation to enable said church to pay the following taxes and assessments upon its property, to wit: Taxes for the years ending December 31, 1868, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, and the assessments for opening Seventy-second-street, between Fourth and Tenth avenues, confirmed February 9, 1866, one hundred and twenty-five dollars and seven, and for opening Seventy-first street, from Fourth-avenue to the East River, and from Tenth-avenue to the Hudson River, confirmed August 20, 1866, one hundred and twenty-six dollars, the amount to be charged to the account of "Donations."

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant in favor of Thomas Murphy for the sum of three hundred and four dollars, to be in full for use of hose from Fourteenth-street, caused by the imperfect construction of said Fire Department, and charge the same to the account of "Contingencies," or any other appropriate account.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Street Commissioner be directed to place two lamps in front of the Methodist Episcopal Bethel Chapel, number one hundred and eighty-six Franklin-street.

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant in favor of Enoch Van Akan, President of the Consistory of the Reformed Dutch Church of Bloomingdale, for the sum of three thousand seven hundred and ninety dollars, to be in full for donation to enable said church to pay the following taxes and assessments upon its property, to wit: Taxes for the years ending December 31, 1868, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, and the assessments for opening Seventy-second-street, between Fourth and Tenth avenues, confirmed February 9, 1866, one hundred and twenty-five dollars and seven, and for opening Seventy-first street, from Fourth-avenue to the East River, and from Tenth-avenue to the Hudson River, confirmed August 20, 1866, one hundred and twenty-six dollars, the amount to be charged to the account of "Donations."

The President put the question whether the Board would concur with the Board of Aldermen in adopting said resolution.

Which was decided in the affirmative by the following vote, (three-fourths of all the members elected voting in favor thereof:)

Affirmative—Councilmen Reilly, Jeremiah O'Brien, Pigott, the President, Councilmen Ivans, Cullen, Hampson, Mack, Gibney, Daly, Kenney, Hoffman, Welch, Heinrich, Fay, Brooks, Thompson, Murphy, John O'Brien, Cunningham, Galligan, Hart, Reynolds, Feltner, Perley—28.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant in favor of Thomas Murphy for the sum of three hundred and four dollars, to be in full for use of hose from Fourteenth-street, caused by the imperfect construction of said Fire Department, and charge the same to the account of "Contingencies," or any other appropriate account.